Miners and coal board expect breakdown in

By Paul Routledge, Labour Editor

Miners leaders are going back pushing and the throwing of talks with the National plastic bags of paintstripper there had been very little into talks with the National Coal Board tomorrow but the union is already looking beyond a breakdown of the negotiations towards a longer strike.

As the stoppage nears the end of its thirteenth week, Mr Arthur Scargill, president of the National Union of Mineworkers, last night told The Times: "If the talks do not continue, we shall continue in exactly the same way as now.

His measured pessimism is reflected in a similar response from senior officials of the National Coal Board, who are discounting earlier, optimistic assessments of the peace process in the industry. Tomorrow's talks, due to take place at private location in South Yorkshire, could break down, it is feared.

The sticking point is still the Coal Board's reluctance to shift publicly from its original demand that there should be 20,000 redundancies in the industry this year and the closure of four million tonnes of capacity, equivalent to about 20

A microcomputer program written to help archaeological excavations is being used by its author to plot the progress of complex excavations at an Iron Age-farm in Heybridge, Essex, and relocate the positions of any find in seconds.

The program, called Pitcalc, written by a member of the archaeological team, Mr Paul Brown, is for use on a Sinclair Spectrum. It is able totell the precise position of a discovery by using three compass readings taken from the edge of the gravel pit where the dig has taken place.

The program was able toreconstruct the entire archaeological plan of the rescue team last year and determine the position of a digger at the time of a discovery. Gravel contractors working on the site with the archaeological team have limited the time which can be devoted to any discovery, so the relocation program is crucial.

Last year the team took 2,000 photographs on site and filled six site notebooks on the

Her visit, they had decreed, did not begin officially until the afternoon. A crowd of many thousands lined the streets of Caen for a glimpse of the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh in their glass-topped Rolls-Royce. As the royal couple alighted at the steps of the town hall the crowd displayed the customary republican enthusiasm for other people's royalty, and burst into prolonged applause.

The Queen, in a turquoise suit with matching hat, smiled sweetly, while the Duke waved energetically as though he had seen an old friend in the crowd.

Following the Queen's car, in a much-less conspicuous black Rover, was Mr Michael Heseltine, who attended yesterday's chairman of the Commitwealth War Graves Commission.

Church escaped destruction

After the presentation of a bouquet by the mayor's sevenvear-old granddaughter and a handshake with each of his 13 deputy mayors, the Queen was escorted into the eleventh-century church of St Etienne to view the simple plaque which marks the tomb of her remote ancestor of 40 monarhs ago, William the Conqueror.

William built the church to appease the Pope after his marriage to Mathilda of Flanders. In the five-week bombardment of Caen after D-Day, the church was one of the few structures to escape destruction by Allied shelling. It was used as a hospital and, appropriately, as a refuge for the civilian population, many hundreds of whom found safety within its ancient buttressed limestone among the blossoming chestnuts, the atmosphere yesterday was of gaiety rather than solemnity, of rediscovered comradeship and the chance of a glimpse of the Queen.

At the canal-side, by the front their families, medals ajangle on door of her cafe, stood Madame proud old breasts, someored proud old breasts, squeezed Therese Gordree, who has built themselves among the grave-a thriving business on her stones, often with less than woman to be liberated on what plots beneath their feet as they jostled for a sight and a photograph.

The British monarch was treated to a rendition more stately than sprightly of her national anthem by the band of the French Foreign Legion; they attacked the more familiar Marseillaise with considerably greater gusto.

Silent army of headstones

The Queen, an excellent French speaker, greeted the President in his native tongue and walked with him down the immaculate green aisle to the tall white cross of sacrifice set in the centre of a silent army of grey headstones.

As the strains of the Last Post died on the hot still air, the perfect silence of remembrance descended on the throng, broken only by a songthrush in a far tree. Even the infernal clicking of camera shutters was momentarily stilled.

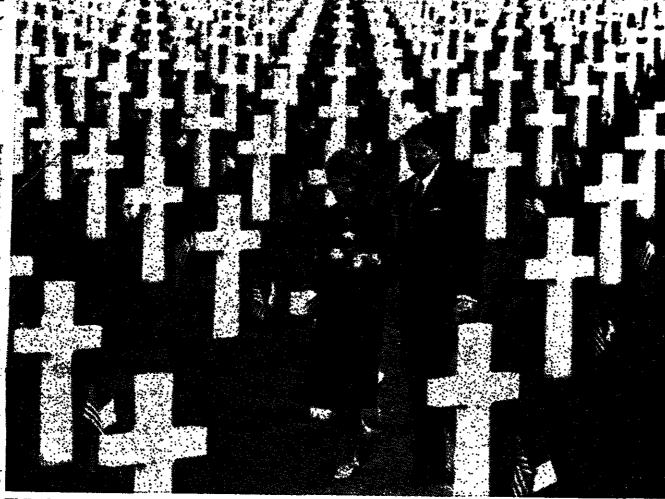

The heads of state and their spouses walked forward together to lay their wreaths at the base of the cross. "Typical" growled a woman in the crowd, noting that the French circle of blood red roses, dressed with a tricolor ribbon, was marginally the larger of the two.

The voice of thousands rose with the words of "O God our help in ages past" and the Chaplain-General of the Armed Forces, Archdeacon William Johnston, prayed for those who still suffered the results of war.

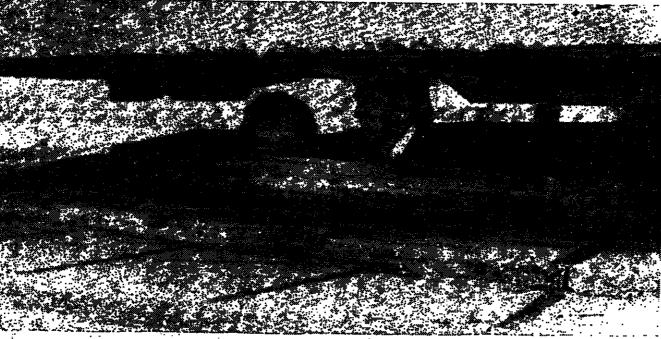

Queen and President walked the long green avenue back to the gate. he chatting constantly and she listening intently, head cocked and nodding. He bade her farewell, then looked around for the Duke, who had been left wrong-footed at the back of the party. He sprang forward gripning broadly and pumped the hand of the President, who climbed into his Renault for a dash through the country lanes of Normandy to the international ceremony at Utah Beach.

It was a signal for sudden relaxation, the relief of a family alone again after the departure of an honoured guest. The Queen toured the cemetery on an enormous walkabout, chatting and joking with dozens of veterans who pressed forward for a treasured moment in the royal presence.

As the Queen left to board a Wessex helicopter for her next engagement at Utah Beach, the army of remembrance completely broke ranks to place their wreaths and stir their own memories of comrades lost in the battle to free the Conqueror's native land.

should not be allowed to make the Germans feel a nation of guilty people, Herr Alois Mertes, Minister of State in the West German Foreign Ministry, said. That would only strengthen pacifist and neutralist forces in the country.

Herr Mertes also gave an explicit warning against any resurrection of anti-German feeling which could lead to a distancing between West Ger-many and its allies.

He said that a victory celebration in this sense could not be in the Western interest, Our allies must always remember that the German people, where they have been able to vote freely, have resolved to pursue their rights to security and reunification in harmony with the values of the Western

The publicity given to Herr Kohl's announcement of a reconciliation ceremony with President Francios Mitterrand at Verdun this autumn has done little to assuage German feelings that the D-Day ceremonies have unfairly overlooked the large number of Germans killed in the battle.

Commentators have also shown a touch of irritation in pointing out that while everyone in Britain has been preoccupied with D-Day, only every third person knew there were to be European elections.

No German underestimates the importance of D-Day in speeding the defeat of Nazi Germany and Hitler's downfall. But many, especially veterans and the older generation, find it more appropriate to commemorate their own opposition to the Nazis rather than defeat on the battlefield.

As each band played its national anthem the flags were raised in turn.

A fly-past by the French aerobatic team, the Patroville de France, left the crowned heads of Europe and two Presidents gazing skywards at their coloured trails.

President Mitterrand paid tribute to the 3,500 allied servicemen killed on D-Day, which he described as the dawn of an uncertain spring.

"Let us salute those who have lived those hours and the veterans, particularly those here today, who are loyal and faithful to their youth. We owe them what we are today and sometimes I wonder whether we have paid them back what

Context was all important in judging whether the use of a word was unparliamentary, The Speaker (Mr Bernard Weatherill) stated in the Commons when MPs sought clarification of his ruling on the use

Context (he said) means how the word is said, means now the word is said the circumstances in which it is said, and when it is said. He remained satisfied that the use of the word "fascist" by Dr Maurice Miller (East Kilbride, Lab) during Tuesday's exchanges on Mr P W Botha's visit to Britain had been intended to give offence to an MR intended to give offence to an MP and amounted to a reflection on his

Mayor in last-ditch request to Karajan

From Michael Binyon

Herr Eberhard Diepgen, the Mayor of West Berlin, is flying to Salzburg this weekend in a last-ditch attempt to bring about a reconciliation between Herbert von Karajan and the Berlin Philharmonic Orches-tra, of which he has been chief conductor for almost 30 years. The mayor received a tele-

Last week Herr von Karajan abruptly cancelled a concert be was due to give with the orchestra in Salzburg on June orchestra in Salzburg on June them. The bitter row has sbaken Berlin's cultural establishment and led to widespread speculation that Herr von Karajan is about to leave Berlin. Herr Volker Hassemer Berlin's cultural senator, said Berlin's cultural senator, same yesterday he still hoped for reconciliation but the prospects were bleak. There was no chance of Herr von Karajan reconsidering his decision to conduct the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra in Salzburg on Isma 11 but he was obliced. on June 11, but he was obliged to say how he envisaged his future cooperation with the Berlin Philharmonic.

Herr Hassemer saw the orchestra's letter to its conduc-tor as a last cry for help. He said in an interview that a final break between the 102-year-old orchestra and its fifth, and arguably greatest, conductor would not be a catastrophe, though it would be "extremely unpleasant and a painful loss for Berlin".

The dispute has deeply divided Germany's music critics. Partisans of the conductor and the orchestra's director, Dr Peter Girdh, accuse the players of arrogance. They say it was Herr von Karajan who built them up into one of the world's greatest musical ensembles. and gave a warning yesterday that without him they would relapse into "cultural provinciality".
Other critics have blamed the conductor's overbearing manner and attempts to flout the orchestra's democratic traditions. "Whether the Berlin Philharmonic remains a great orchestra, culturally as well as morally, is not only a Berlin question, but also something of a national question", the critic on the Frankfurter Allge Zeitung, wrote yesterday.

"The Philharmonic is more than a symbol of the highly regarded cultural excellence of the Germans.

Confident Ceausescu arrives in Warsaw

Comecon, the East European trading alliance, has not met at summit level for 13 years, at least partly because Romania is reluctant to attend a meeting that will press for much deeper Soviet block integration. Bucharest is worried that a large degree of economic dependency on Moscow will undermine some of its independence in foreign policy.

Fresh from a trip to Moscow

two days ago, the Romanian President seems to be confident that the problems have been, if not exactly ironed out, at least put into suspended animation. The summit is expected to go ahead as planned on Tuesday in Moscow. Although the Moscow talks were described in the Communique as, among other things, "businesslike and frank"

- diplomatic codewords for differences of view - Romania displayed a more orthodox line on defence.

A phrase "underscoring the importance" of the Warsaw Pact showed that Bucharest, which does not allow Warsaw Pact troops to be stationed on its territory, is prepared to swear loyalty whenever this seems diplomatically appropri-

Poland and Romania approach the Comecon summit from quite different positions. Poland is reorientating its economy towards the Soviet Union and its communist neighbours in an attempt to export industries.

President Ceausescu of sidestep Western sanctions and Romania, who holds the key to ease the crippling burden of the success or failure of next debts to the West Moscow has shown itself willing to give considerable assistance - including the rescheduling of Poland's substantial debts to the Soviet Union - in return for this integration.

Romania is willing to accept closer cooperation with Moscow, but not structural changes in industry, nor the sacrifice of its ties with the West.

However, both Poland and Romania are united in their need for continued supplies of cheap oil from the Soviet Union, Given its hard currency crisis and its need to relaunch its industry, Warsaw would also like increased quantities. Romania has not been receiving concessionary priced oil from its large neighbour and in general pays in hard currency. But earlier this year Moscow agreed to supply 1.5 million tonnes of crude in return for Romanian goods in kind and non-convertible cash. This may have helped to ease the tension before the summit.

Poland and Romania have also been showing themselves responsive to some of the louder complaints of the Soviet Union about the quality of goods Comecon countries were selling to Moscow in return for oil and raw materials. A weekend meeting of the Communist Party Central Com-mittee criticized the quality of engineering exports - the Engineering Minister was dis-missed shortly before the session - and the Romanian press is full of complaints about the production quality of its

ILO chief attacks drive towards 35-hour week

From Alan McGregor, Geneva

The International Labour Organization is under fire at its three-week annual conference, which opened yesterday. The Soviet bloc and some developing countries are strongly critical of its Committee on Freedom of Association, which is in charge of overseeing implementation of international labour conventions.

They contend that it has turned into something like a supra-national tribunal, seeking to impose its own interpretation of national legislation.

The IIO's reply to this, as given by its Director General, Mr Francis Blanchard, is that the committee's essential function is to ascertain the facts without fear or favour, irrespective of governments' suscepti-

The conference is also to discuss current efforts, as in West Germany, to reduce working hours in order to create new jobs. Mr Blanchard told a news conference that the 35 hour week was a somewhat debatable concept He regarded legislation for shorter working hours as feasible in conditions of sustained economic growth. In recession, however, this must be a matter for negotiation within individual enterprises, not for acrossthe-board regulations.

For the first time a woman has been elected president of the conference - Mrs Anna-Greta Leijon, aged 45, the Swedish Minister of Labour. She told delegates from 150 nations that trade unions were under pressure almost everywhere.

When I visited him once again in his elegant, but simple, home on the outskirts of this charming Swabian town, the impression he gave me was that of a man who recalls with regret what was done to him, without, however, having been funda-mentally changed by it. His appearance is still extremely youthful, despite his 56 years: a tanned face goes well with a white track-suit, while his views on Pope John Paul II are pretty athletic, too. He starts with a comparison.

I find that two personalities who are very similar, who understand each other very well, and who meet from time to time - the last time was in Alaska - are the Pope and President Reagan. They have the same approach to people. It a very nice, charming, charismatic approach; both are able to convince people and to read with great conviction speeches they have not written themselves. Even their gestures are very similar".

I asked whether this was because they were both former actors. He replied: I always have the impression that both, when they are on their journeys, side. They were at European are thinking very much about crossroads, with the German their own public image. When President Reagan is on the waving to the television audiences who will see him back home in the United States. The Pope, too, certainly wants to appeal to the Catholic church and to the world at large. They both have real charisma in their television appearances.

"The contradiction in their attitudes to human rights is very similar. They both protest against the suppression of human rights in Eastern Europe, but President Reagan helps to suppress such rights in Central America and the Pope suppresses them inside the Catholic church. And they do not even see the contradiction. "Neither man studies verv much. They do not like paperwork. They like to talk; they like to receive individuals person-ally. Their predecessors, President Carter and Pope Paul VI, both studied documents, perhaps too well and too scrupulously. But the present two holders of supreme office don't do enough of it, and both dislike talking to people who are critical of them. They are surrounded by yes-men (not even by yes-women) and both are happy if they find public applause. They think if they are applauded they are right.

And they do not see that they make tremendous mistakes. I believe that a lot of these mistakes will be obvious only after time has passed. Many of the Pope's mistakes will be visible when the fascination of the media has gone, and that fascination, as you know, lasts only a short time.

What is it like to be a famous Swiss Catholic when the Pope is about to visit Switzerland?

'I think it is a problem for the Swiss to be Catholic, and now to have this triumphalistic, monarchical, impression created by one man. When the papacy was a political power, the Swiss were sometimes against it and sometimes on its emperors to the north, the French monarch to the west Great Wall of China you have and, in the south, the Popes. the impression that he is not Switzerland produced the best thinking about China, he is troops in Europe, which is why the Pope's bodyguard was, and remains, Swiss. But I have the feeling that the Swiss attitude was always rather sober. The whole character of the people is not very enthusiastic anyway, except for their defence of their independence and freedom. Switzerland is a politically conservative country, but with a lot of common sense, and they usually looked at the papacy in a realistic way.'

Professor Hans Kung: 'A great deal of this pontificate is just rhetoric'

And, of course, Switzerland was the leading country after Germany in producing the reform: Zwingli was second to Luther and this shaped the history of the country.

"For a long time Catholics were a minority. Now the numbers are more or less the same. Relations became much closer after the Vatican Council. Certainly Protestant reserves nowever are increasing because of this papal visit. That is a fact. They are, for instance, counting the number of hours the Pope tacts, and complain that in six days there will be only six hours with non-catholics."

And those six hours includes his meetings with the World Council of Churches and with the Eastern Orthodox Church. Pointing to press releases from the Protestant side, Kung noted the fear expressed that confessional peace may be disturbed by the visit.

What is very strong, though, in Switzerland, and will be very much in the Pope's favour is this: because of Switzerland's record for freedom and because of the continual Swiss battle for independence, there is a lot a sympathy for Poland. The Pope is considered to be against the communist system and for his country's freedom. There has even been an attempt on his life, and a lot of these things in the field of foreign policy are helpful for him.

The visit is seen to be good for tourism and people will make money from it

The visit is seen to be good for tourism and people will make money from it. "Nevertheless the bishops were worried that not enough people would go to the mass meeting planned at Lucerne. And so I heard that they made a special point of inviting foreign workers in the country, all the Italians, and the others who they think will be a little more enthusiastic about the Pope than the Swiss."

There has been talk in Switzerland that the initiative for the visit came from the Pope rather than from the Swiss bishops. This was Professor comment on the attitude of the bishops.

"At the beginning, they said it would be a very modest visit, according to the traditions of how rich one is, you have to behave in a modest way, and not with a lot of show. And so, this was considered a pastoral visit and a modest one, without pomp and ceremony. But now the television spectacle alone will change that. This will be the biggest production ever organized by Swiss television: 30 hours of transmission and 110 persons involved. No critical reporting is foreseen, just as was the case during the Pope's visit to Germany. This is regular feature of papal visits?

My own analysis is that there are three elements which assure the success of papal visits. The first is that the papal speeches are mostly drafted in the country which the Pope is to visit. That is why what he says in Scotland is a little different from what he says in England and what he says in Germany is different again. We made little reference in Germany to the birth-control people thought this was receding in importance. But when he went to the Philippines he repeated it strongly. If his speeches in Switzerland are prepared by the Swiss bishops, he will once again steer clear of birth-control because there it is still a hot issue". The second element to ensure success is that, especially on television, you have safe people reporting the visit, who will not make critical comments. "The third is that all the texts prepared for his addresses have to go to Rome for approval.

And that is the reason why the Pope himself never sees any clear statement on political And so he is surprised when rotests are made such as that by a nun during his visit to the United States who wanted a greater presence for women in the church, and one made in Germany by a girl representing young Catholics who complained of what she called the church's lack of a sense of uman partnership, and its failure to understand problems of sexuality and of priestly

And this was a tremendous event here when it happened but it was due only to a break in the system of control.

What did, the Pope's ban on Professor Kung as an official teacher of theology mean in effect? The compromise which he arrived at with the auth-orities of Tubingen University means that he lectures now in his capacity as director of the university's Institute for Ecumenical Research. On balance he feels that he is in a stronger position than before.

"They tried to make of me a peripheral figure in the univerperipheral at all. As director of the institute I have complete this country. In Switzerland, it university, and more people is not considered good to show come to my lectures than before. Also, a colleague from the German Department and I have established courses interdisciplinary lectures. Students can come from all departments. This became a very great success. My new book on eternal life is based on these lectures. Similarly, my next book on world religions is the outcome of these courses. Almost 1,000 people come to hear me every Monday evening.

"What was intended as a punishment proved to be also an advantage. I can make my own programme. If I want to concentrate on world religious I am no longer bound to follow the official course of Catholic theology. I am not bound by any curriculum. We have also organized two important international symposiums of theology. The institute is also at work on a study of women in Christianity.

> I would specially speak out for the partners in mixed marriages

When I asked Professor Kung to sum up the pontificate of John Paul II, he did so in largely ecumenical terms: "People will forget the travelling because the Pope's journeys have done little to change anything for the better. I was surprised how even Britain they have been fascinated by nice words without any action. Nothing of a kind has happened in the whole ecumenical field since this nontificate began.

"For the Pope to go to a Lutheran church, that is nothing. It would have been a step forward if he had said there: 'Pastor, I am sure that you are a real pastor and that you are celebrating the Eucharist in a valid way'.

"And when he goes to Switzerland, this would be one of the things that would really be a step forward: not to speak more nice words and establish another commission - that is not what I mean - but to say, after half a millennium has passed since Reformation, that the Reformed pastors in Switzerland are validly ordained pastors, and that their communion service is a valid

"It would be good, for instance, that partners in mixed marriages could go together either to a Reformed or Catholic church. Protestants could be welcomed at mass while Catholics could, if they had good reason for doing so, go to Protestant services. And I would specially speak out for the partners in mixed marriages. I think that a great deal of this pontificate is rhetoric - no renewal within the church and no ecumenism. Just rhetoric.

FINDINGS

A series reporting on research: SURVIVAL AND RESCUE

Drowning chance

within 10 yards of a safe refuge. says Surgeon Commander Frank Golden, director of research at the Institute of Naval Medicine, Gosport,

He tested 10 swimmers, capable of swimming fully clothed in warm water for 10 minutes, and put them (still clothed) in water at a temperature of only 5°C, typical inland winter water temperature. Three swam for 10 minutes, but between two and three heart beats remained normal, but the those who breathed fastest

Jimmy Tontlewicz, aged four, was under ice and water in Lake Michigan for 20 minutes earlier this year. Divers found the child clinically dead. At the hospital his body temperature was found to be under 30°C. The extreme cold had reduced the brain's metabolic rate and need for oxygen, and Jimmy survived the latest in several recorded cases where apparently drowned people have come back to life.

A possible explanation is the mammalian diving reflex which allows seals, whales and other air-breathing aquatic mammals to remain under water for up to 30 minutes. Blood is redistributed from skin, muscles and gut to heart, lungs and brain. But for humans, the likeliest sur-vival occurs when the victims are young and the water icy: at 18°C a body's oxygen needs are 22 per cent of normal. The message from Dr Michael Davidson of Philadelphia's Germantown Hospital is that if resuscitation is continued, even when drowning is apparent, many of the 8,000 people, especially children, who drown in the United States each year could be saved.

To the rescue

Coastal and sea rescues are on the increase. A total of 324 incidents with inflatables; 25 people cut off by the tide, 457 lost children were among the record 1,237 first aid cases attended last year by the Surf Life Saving Association, whose volunteers man beaches in the West Country, Wales and parts of southern counties. The figures were nearly double the 622 cases in 1982. In 1983, there were 887 sea rescues, with lifesavers using a set of aids from boards and skis to a stiff polythene torpedo buoy, the shape of a cigar two feet long: all providing immediate buoyancy to a patient whose only concern is to take the next breath.

Buoyant spirit Ordinary ing, including a woollen pullover. worn under a watertight non-insulated nonbuovant inumersion suit, still gives 20 kilograms of buoyancy. That is a distinct disadvantage for anyone escaping from trapped space underwater. A trapped space underwater. A lifejacket need only have 16 kilograms, while one Norwegian traps enough air to give a buoyancy rating three times higher. Research continues to find a suit which provides a compromise between buoyancy, insulation and leakage. One leaked litre of seawater under the layers of clothing reduces insulation by 50 per cent – and could reduce survival time by the same amount. Fit is also vital. Five hundred men and women are being measured at the Offshore Survival Centre 10 produce a range of ideal sizes.

Upright danger

A fifth of sea deaths occur during, or shortly after, rescue. Three Fastnet race yachtsmen died in this period, and anecdeta in this period, and anecdotal evidence going back to the last war records similar percentages. A cause, initially suggested by the Royal Navy, and now being explored by the Offshore Survival Centre, Aberdeen, is that stress on the body while victims are winched out of the water is to blame. Researchers led by physiologist Ian Light, have immersed men and women in a pool for up to an hour, fixed in a harness. The more perpendicular the body the higher the head and the deeper the feet — the more detrimental is the effect of a vertical lift.

As Ian Light explains, at a depth of six feet, there's a one and a half pounds per square blood is literally pushed to the body's core. The pressure is less at, say 45 degrees. Ten men, whose heart beats remained pormal in the water, were lifted up after an hour: the difference became dramatic, with heart rates ranging from the mid-50s to more than 120 beats a That may explain why an elderly lady, air lifted from a snowbound train in Scotland last winter, died from cardiac arrest. While tests in Aberdeen show the advantages of a nearly horizontal lift - with strops placed under knoes as well as under arms, this can present practical problems in emergencies. The answer might con with totally new designs, per-haps more like nets already used to scoop victims out waves and on to boats.

The Russian satellite is known to have saved at least 23 lives.

This is more information than we normally get from Alan, so I left it at that until we were actually bouncing south in a BBC van through Lisburn. Then I asked the driver where we were going, shrewdly reckon-ing he'd know more than Alan. "Castle Ward", he said. "It's a National Trust property just outside Downpatrick." Downpatrick! My birthplace. The place which, on my passport, causes officials to look at me as if wondering which pocket I've got the bombs in. The place where my father was stationed for two years in the war in the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, though he must have known the Germans would never land there. Perhaps that's why he was there. Although the Germans never arrived, I did, and that's why I have an Irish birthplace with no more Irish blood in me than Jesse Jackson. "My dad always used to say", I told the driver, "that Downpa-trick had nothing but a racecourse and a mental asylum". "It hasn't changed at all", he said. "Have a look for yourself "Lads", I told the string quartet, "you can stop listening to Viv Richards on your pocket radio and pay attention. My birthplace is round the corner." saying we'd have to give the town a miss. The security forces wanted us to go anywhere but Downpatrick. Castle Ward is an amazing place. It's not a castle at all, for a start. For another start, it was built by a husband who liked classical buildings and a wife Gothic style. Neither side would compromise, so one half of the building (c. 1765) is classical, the other half Gothic. The room I liked best had huge Gothic mouldings bellying down from the ceiling, perhaps to look like the inside of an Arab tent, though John Betieman had apparently described being in the room as like standing under

"I've been working here forty ears", said the gardener whom consulted about the huge elms in the grounds. They haven't had Dutch Elm Disease, apparently. "When I first came here it still belonged to the Ward family, but they had to sell because of death duties. Mr Ward now runs an antique shop in London, I believe."

"Excuse me", said (later) the BBC vision supervisor, Peter Jones, "but don't you come from Wrexham? This is the Welsh town to which my father went to brew beer after the Germans were defeated. I have no Welsh blood either. Mine was a very confused childhood. "My father, George Jones, knew your dad very well - he did a lot of work for the brewery. Do you remember Tosh, who worked for the brewery and George Monslow?" Well, gosh, yes I did. What a small world it is when you go back to your birthplace. Even smaller when I discovered that the antique shop run by Mr Ward, seventh Lord Bangor, is at the top of the Portobello Road, not 200 yards from where I live, a place called Trad. All in all, I think I picked up more links than Ronald Reagan did. "So, what was your birth-place like?" my children asked, when I got back. "I don't know", I told them athfully. "The security arrangements for my visit were so tight that I couldn't get in."

An unloved son and his subtle anguish

those who have already seen the published extracts from this book may need some assurance that its title is not a misnomer: this is indeed a biographical study of the author's father and not merely a public attempt to discredit his mother, Rebecca West. But, in the technical sense, before he can convince us of his story Mr West is obliged to discredit his mother's version of crucial events in his own life. The book begins and concludes with this act of discrediting. And although innumerable other witnesses are attacked: Trotsky's account of Lenin's view of H. G. Wells, for instance, or the Fabian Old Guard view, or less importantly the views of recent scholars in the field - still the most immediately controversial aspect of the book is its matricidal quality.

If on the other hand we were told that his account of his experiences in Spain was a complete fiction we would have to do some fairly radical rethinking. And if Mr West is right that his mother concocted a bogus archive and planted evidence in the form of letters in order to paint a picture of her relationship with Wells (not to mention their son) which was the reverse of the truth. then we shall indeed have to do more than pause for breath. That sense of the morality of her perceptions will be undermined.

scape: But if we are to believe the son, it was the father who did the escaping. On internal evidence alone, the son's account is thoroughly believable, despite the anger with which some passages are imbued. That Mr West makes no bones about his anger is in a way a help, since it lets us see clearly what we are witnessing: a family battle with its origins in the last century.

The crucial ancestor is Wells's mother, who hated her husband and the Bromley shop in which Wells grew up, and who eventually went off into service leaving her family behind. The fact that she did not love her son had two major consequences first, she did her level best to prevent him continuing a promising education by twice best to prevent him continuing a promising education by twice having him bound apprentice in jobs which had absolutely no future; more importantly, Wells was clearly left with an inability to furm a permanent and satisfactory loving relationship with any woman. His second wife, Jane, found that this suited her in some ways. She commission at Well's affairs, as long as the appropriate of the circle he took as she approved of the girls he took establishment she provided for Wells to come home to was sufficiently attractive to him to ensure that he always did, in the pastime in a class with golf or cards." This theory is untrue, and this book shows its untruth very clearly. For a start, despite those reliable contraceptive devices, unmarried women did mysteriously become pregnant after intercourse with Wells; they also become suicidal. In one case the unfortunate Amber Reeves (the original of Ann Veronica) became both pregnant and suicidal, with consequences that included: her marrying a man she did not love, her father suffering a breakdown, considerable misery for her mother, public scandal, black-mail through the law, a massive row in the Fabian Society, resulting in the daughter through liaison being brought up in ignorance of her true parentage - only to suffer wretchedly on finding out the truth.

ot all of these consequences were directly Wells's fault. After all he was not responsible for the hypocrisies of his day. He was a public defender of the rights of women and a liberal attitude to morals. Indeed it was precisely because of his notoriety in this respect that so many women sought him out for a fling, coming and going without bother or fuss, according to Mr West, having occupied his "awk-ward hour" - which was between five and seven in the afternoon. From a contemporary perspective it might have seemed as if the casualties of Wells's promiscuity were in fact victims of society. Yet from the perspective provided by this book it is obvious that Wells was emotionally lacking. The imagination for which he was famous was deficient in this crucial respect. The power of reason, in which he finally shaken when he realized that he had become dependent on Moura Budberg and that his dependence was in no way affected by the knowledge that she was spying for

This combination of faith in reason and emotional deficiency has a certain period flavour (there is something of the same quality in Bertrand Russell). The women of the book suffer from a similar trait they allow their zeal for liberation to take them beyond their emotional capabilities. They read - or rather they misread - Ibsen (you may remember that Ibsen was horrified to find that a woman had left her husband and child as if on the advice of Nora in The Dolls House). And the one who decided to call herself Rebecca West soon found herself out of her depth. She could not face motherhood, so her son grew up calling her Aunty Panther. and it is clear that this symbolic refusal to be a mother and to allow her son natural access to his father's affections is a key to the story Mr West has to tell.

For he was determined that he would find his father both emotionally during Wells's life and biographically afterwards. At the beginning of his quest in the later the representation of Wells was in 1940s, the reputation of Wells was in something of an eclipse (although the shadow of this eclipse passed over the literary establishment and seems to have spared the general reading public). As time went on, something happened which Wells himself had probably not foreseen: Rebecca West's reputation as a serious writer grew and grew, until it seemed to the son that it was being used once again to blot out the father. Nothing biographical could be done about this until the mother's death, so Mr West had had to wait a long time.

As a result and to a remarkable degree this book is both a considered biography and an outburst. Its psychological structure is very subtle. It is full of essay-length portraits of key figures and move-ments as well as historical back-ground. There are masses of characters but none of them appear incidental. And yet the rage which Mr West can feel when describing, say, the first Fabians gives you the impression that he himself has just been patronized or thwarted by them. He is fighting his father's battles all over again - the battle against the unloving mother being the first of many.

The hard truth of Normandy

The Battle for Normandy in 1944 will probably become one of those epic battles in world history like Marathon, Water-loo, or Gettysburg which can be written about by successive generations of authors and historians without losing their compelling interest. Max Hastings has used all the more important official histories, biographies, and autobiographies to provide the framework of his pen portrait of Overlord. He has fleshed it out with personal interviews of a wide cross-section of British, American, Canadian, and German participants, some of whom, like Field Marshals Lord Carver and Sir Edwin Bramall, have since risen to military and political eminence. His sources can possibly be faulted on the German side hecause he does not appear to have consulted the important collection of German War Diaries of von Rundstedt's HQ and of the 7th and 15th German Armies held

The question Hastings sets out to answer and does so successfully, is how it was that, despite the losses suffered by the German Army in Russia and despite the Allies' overwhelming material superiority, particularly in the air. Eisen-hower's forces made such heavy weather of the fighting once they were safely ashore. The picture he paints of the high level controversies about Mont-gomery's tactical handling of operations, of the unfortunately persistent disagreements with the Air Forces, and of the inherent national rivalries and antagonisms between the Allies, is clearly and fairly presented. Nevertheless, he rightly points out that far too much attention has already been focused on the command decisions, and too little upon the actual capabili- xander McKee's 1964 edition of ties of the Allied and German forces expected to carry them out. the Germans lost it only after Allied numerical and material superiority was well past the professionalism of the German Army was bound to collapse.

Max Hastings highlights three reasons for the Allies' failure: the stark difference in ethos between the two sides, the Allied servicemen doing an unwelcome job in the cause of democraev and depending upon fire power to save lives, and the German Army, profoundly influenced by events in the East, fighting to the last to escape Gotterdammerung the marked inferiority of the allied armies' equipment, particularly their lack of a tank to match the German Tigers and Panthers; and the Allies' over-estimate of what the Allied Air Forces could do to help win the land battle. He gives Montgomery and Bradley full credit for understanding the limitations of their forces and the dynamism of the Germans, which their contemporaries, including Churchill and Eisenhower failed to grasp. The attritiona battles they fought matched the realities of the situation and were successful - in the end. This book is an excellent starting point for anyone who has been inspired by the 40th Anniversary of D Day to learn more about Overlord without wading through the tomes of the Official Histories. For those who know a lot about it already Hastings's second generation judgements are interestingly free from chauvinism. For both it is a very readable book. (The

A long time in politics

Michael Foot's account of the 1983 election campaign and its outcome makes sad reading. There is a self-pity, born of what he calls the agony of Labour's defeat, which was foreign to his nature in happier times. Self-knowledge struggles with the need to establish that the party was brought down, as indeed it was, by other agencies than his own shortcomings as a leader.

It is actually rather more than a century: when the show of Rosenthal porcelain from its beginnings to the present started out it was a centenary show in 1979, but now that it has reached the Victoria and Albert Museum (until July 1) another five years have gone by and there have been several important additions to the company's grand series of limited-edition pots, the Studio-Linie, like Roy Lichtenstein's Tca Sci, hot off the production line this very

For Rosenthal, though the firm began very modestly with humorous ashtrays and the like, very soon found an important place for knowingly artistic activities among the porcelain normally produced.

As well as imposing decorative pieces, the Jugendstil period offers some finely simple, subtle pots like the oddly named Botticelli/Darmstadt coffee service (curvaceous leaf patterns on a coolly elegant white base) which were very clearly meant for practical use. And the Deco period which follows runs dazzling First-Russian-Ballet-Period colours in jagged geo-metric forms to the powerfully

Kun Woo Paik Wigmore Hall

According to the advance publicity, the Korean pianist Kun Woo Palk is proposing to play the entire piano music of Liszt in a series of six weekly concerts. Impossible, of course, as a glance at Humphrey Scarle's work-list will readily reveal. Nevertheless, in the course of his marathon, Paik is covering substantial ground. Indeed he did so in just one rather short instalment.

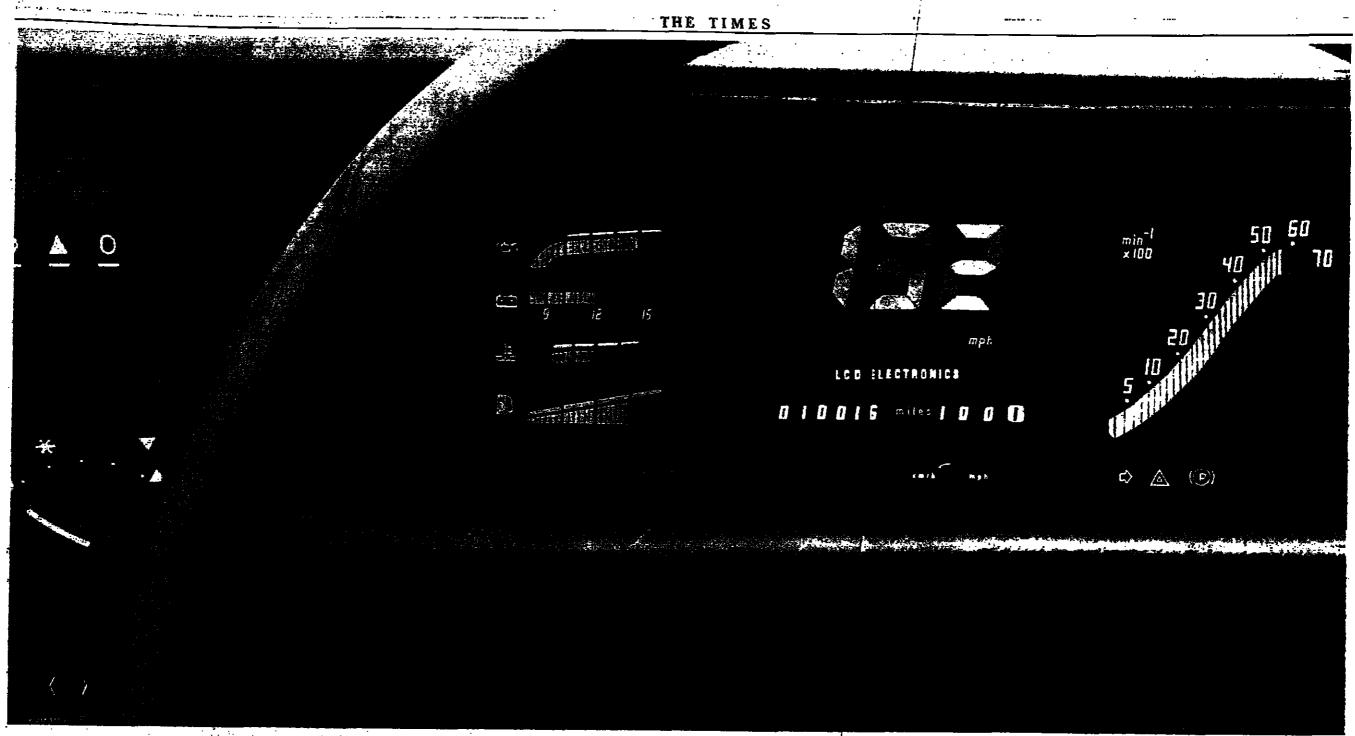

Perhaps the most remarkable feature of this recital was its authentic atmosphere. In the opening group there may have been little in the way of profound musical thought, for all the fascination offered by the work that would be distilled later into the famous La Campanella, namely the Grande Faniasa de bravure sur "Là clochette" (1832).

Nor was the splashiness inevitable in virtuosic Liszt a particularly pleasant listening experience. But Paik is a daredevil very much in the Lisztian mould, and the sheer physical thrill generated in his playing of the 1840 version of Mazeppa, the single-stave E major Paganini Study (1851) and the unusually concise A minor Grande Etude (1837) minor Grande Etude (1837) fully justified his casting of caution to the winds,

But if here Liszt the acrobat sprang into action, in the sequence of late works that opened the second half Liszt the mystic was reawakened. At last, in the haunting tritones of huages Gris (1881), the spinechilling markiness of the first Lia Lugubre Gondola (com-posed late in 1882 in reaction to List's accurate premonition of Wagner's death) and the obsessive Trauervorspiel und Trauer-marsch (1885), Paik was able to show a considerable sense of portry as he revelled in the strangeness of Liszt's spirituali-

This was a lighly charged but intelligent performance, with dynamic contrasts so extreme that at one point Paik rather unfortunately broke a hammer. It was sensitive too, making the most of moment yet never allowing us to forget that the work is really a symphony, and as such an important stepping stone in the gulf between Beethoven and Mahler. Black mark for Kinnock

Labour's concern for Britain's black community may be less heartfelt than Shadow Home Secretary Gerald Kaufman would have had us believe on Channel 4's Black on Black on Tuesday night, Kaufman replaced the advertised interview with Neil Kinnock because, the presenter announced, the Labour leader had "a problem with British Rail". Kinnock had indeed been delayed - earlier in the day on his way to London from Blackpool. He was in the Commons for Question Time by 3.15; the deadline of the TV recording was 6 pm. Nonetheless his office phoned the programme to make the excuse, and sent Kaufman instead. "We must come pretty low in his list of priorities", says Black on Black's producer Trevor Phillips. "The point of the programme was that black Labour members want to set up a black section because the perty has let them down in the past and not taken them seriously. If it wanted to give ammunition to that view, this is an excellent way of doing it."

Scene change?

The American Ballet Theatre is said to be about to poach our own Sir Kenneth MacMillan, principal chor-cographer of the Royal Ballet. When the ABT's artistic director Mikhail Baryshnikov signed a new contract carrier this season, he insisted on being allowed to appoint an associate director. Apparently he approached American choreograpiter Twyla Tharp, but she turned him down. Now the talk is that Sir Kenneth is seriously considering the offer, but wants his favourite dancer Alessandra Ferri to go too. Yesterday he could not be reached: the Reyal Ballet said he was in New York - visiting the American Ballet

Oh, minister!

The GLC newspaper The Londoner, described by Mrs Thatcher as "a disgraceful waste of money and a disgraceful increase on the tax burden", has just been sent an article by none other than Patrick article by none other than Patrick lenkin, the Environment Minister. Obligingly accompanied by a photoof himself, Jenkin has graph of himself, Jenkin nas submitted four pages denouncing what he calls "GLC propaganda 1984-style, masterminded by Ken Livingstone and his expensive PR and describing the antiabolition campaign as "downright nonsense: but then what would you expect from Mr Livingstone?" The GLC is not a jot offended. Indeed, it is "delighted that Patrick Jenkin has recognized that The Lendoner is a legitimate means of conveying views to Londoners". It will carry his pearls in full in the next issue. The right of reply? Readers can simply turn to the opposite page to find Ken Livingstone, who, I understand is pounding his typewriter as we write.

The Crown, I can reveal, is quietly living off immoral earnings. A report just out from the National Audit Office, looking into the Inland Revenue's investigation work, discloses that the taxman operates three Special Units. PHS's report of Ronald Reagan's meet trial, taking place in London teday, on a charge of "crimes against immunity" has prompted instant cries of "rigged". The Boss and the Great Rondini

Many of Mrs Thatcher's close aides refer to her, simply, as "The Boss": she is so obviously in charge. Some of Mr Reagan's close aides have taken to referring to him as "the Great "Rondini". Whenever he seems to be tied arms and legs by Congress, bottled up by Volker's policies at the Fed caught in an policies at the Fed, caught in an impossible international situation, he somehow manages to escape.

It is important, in their private discussions this week, that the Prime Minister ties down the president until they have had a frank and clear exchange of views.

For, despite very obvious similarities of outlook between them, and their undoubted liking and admiration for each other, there is still far too much misunderstanding and disagreement. Much of it is created by their respective foreign services, who all too often have advised them into positions from which the only escape is political

The British Government has been dangerously unaware of the depth of the Administration's concern with the problem on the US's southern border. Had it been so aware, it would never have countenanced any suggestion of withdrawal from Belize until the region was more settled.

Central America is crucial to America. The Soviet Union, seeing itself surrounded by enemies or potential enemies, and seeing America free of such shackles, naturally wants to redress the balance. Hostile states on the US southern border would fit the bill nicely. Soviet global strategy is directed towards detaching Europe from the US. Getting the US bogged down in Central America is one way to achieve this goal.

Europeans have tended to play down Soviet and Cuban involvement in Central America. But it is entirely possible that as a result of the determined destabilization of the area by the Soviet Union and Cuba. El Salvador could crack. This fissure could lead to Guatemala and on to Mexico. Then nearly one hundred million people on the US southern border would be under the influence or control of pro-Soviet regimes. Continuing failure by Britain to understand US horror at this prospect is foolhardy. Now consider a US failure. The budget deficit is a source of regret growing into annoyance in London as interest rates have been forced to rise through no fault of British economic policy.

Whenever the deficit is mentioned to Washington officials they smile politely. They say privately that they are bored with European complaints about the deficit and that they cannot do anything about it because of Congress.

This is simply not good enough. President Reagan is very good at persuading Congress to do what he wants. The elected representatives may grumble. They may take their time. But, in the end, they have usually complied with his wishes. US officials have not realized how dangerous the deficit could become. not just for their allies, but for

There are other misunderstandings. Britain tends to get caught up in the US's general Euro-pessimism. At the moment far too many US officials are still unaware of the great moral and material changes that have taken place in Britain during the past five years - far too unaware of the remarkable turnaround in its economic performance. It's no good blaming American insularity. We must point out Britain's, achievements more forcefully.

Whether the president acts to improve the performance of the State Department or not, there is much the Prime Minister can and should do to improve the performance of the Foreign Office. She must reaffirm clear policy goals for Britain's relationship with the US. She must oblige the Foreign Office to admit to and examine past failures to learn how to avoid repetition. There is an incipient anti-Americanism in Britain. Born out of a decline in international status, fuelled by Suez, and during the Falklands by the US attempts to negotiate a settlement instead of coming out in support immediately, given added zest by the divergence over Grenada. Unless the UK wants to reorientate itself towards an alliance with the Soviet Union, the Government must take steps to create enthusiasm for America. Many in the Foreign Office are either nervous or contemptuous of the Americans, or both. The increase in CIA covert action in Central America, the sight of a great battleship pounding the Lebanese mountains in impotent fury after the Lebanese withdrawal, the mining of the Nicaraguan ports, all have contributed. For those who find these actions incomprehensible, even though they are consistent, for those who cannot accept that even though some of them may have been mistaken, keeping the Soviet Union guessing is a legitimate way to deter war, all the more reason to gain and hold the maximum possible influence over the American government.

Overt anti-Americanism or simple distain will not help to make the world a safer place. The principle goal of British foreign policy towards the US must be to exert as much influence as possible over decision making, domestic and foreign. To do so Britain must prove a reliable, sympathetic and wise ally.

The Foreign Office has two fundamental tasks in the promotion. of this goal. To provide accurate intelligence and to provide sound advice. It patently failed to provide intelligence on the Falklands and intelligence and advice on Grenada.

As a result of the Grenada failures the Foreign Secretary was made to look foolish in the House of Commons only hours before the invasion took place, and even now many close to the president remain astonished that the British were, and remained, so unhelpful.

It is conventional Foreign Office wisdom that the present US Administration speaks with many voices, that it is made up of insular, uncosmopolitan men, that friendships cannot be reliably made, that its actions cannot be accurately predicted. This, frankly, is feeble Predicting the actions of foreign governments is, after all, the job of the Foreign Office. That the Americans parade their disagreements in public should make it easier, not harder, to discern their policy trends.

Many close to President Reagan feel that British officials in the Washington Embassy prefer Demo-crats to Republicans. Many say that they are surprised that greater efforts have not been made to get to know them. They feel that British officials in Washington are unsympathetic to their concerns, regard the Reagan Administration as unreliable, unpre-dictable and dangerous. If this were true, it is all the more reason to become close, and so to exert restraining influence.

Far more than any previous governments, President Reagan's men are ready to have close relations with Britain, not just so that they can get their own way. They appreciate, often more than the Briton they happen to be speaking to, how much experience and knowledge the British have to offer them. Many of them accept without demur that, politically, Reagan is Son of Thatcher.

At an unusually dangerous time for the world it is essential that great efforts are made to resolve problems between the allies. Even if President Reagan and Mrs Thatcher, in discussions during the summit, clear all the air, and they probably will, there can be no confidence that the understanding they reach personally will work its way down through their respective foreign service bureaucracies unless they both take early and radical

To its credit, the Communist Party realizes that there is something amiss in the factories one of the reasons why a session of the central committee was recently thrown open to 800 ordinary workers – but it is largely at a loss as to the next step. The workers must be kept sweet -they have toppled too many governments in the past, and yet they have also to bear the major sacrifices demanded by economic

> The strained credibility of the new unions could be shrugged off by the Polish government as it is in other socialist countries, but recent developments have shown that the workers can make or break General Jaruzelski's economic reform pro-

Workers in a workers' state have two sources of power. The first is mythical; they are atotem pole of a communist state, every action is made in their name, from them all legitimacy flows. Every now and then they have to be consulted, the first four or five months of this every now and then policies have to be slightly tailored to show government responsiveness to the workers. The other source of power is the ability to block change. By simply downing tools - as happened in a holiday pay dispute in the FSO car factory - they can force the management to make concessions. Technically, strikes are allowed only as a last resort. In practice, as demonstrated in dozens of unpublicized cases since the lifting of martial law, the management will crumple and settle as quietly and quickly as possible. The Solidarity underground has always grasped this shopfloor potential and has urged workers to convert it into a boycott of the new unions and into a production goslow, symbolized by the caricature of a snail that is scrawled on the wall of many Polish factories. Boycotting the unions is easy enough, even if the material incentives are attractive for older and retired workers, but goslows hit the pocket and so assinst the grain of skilled workers. Material shortages are already slowing down production, though less so than a year ago, in many sectors of

Ringmaster of the summit

If, after this week's summit in London, the world's economic prospects look a little brighter, at least some of the credit should go to a energetic bachelor whose hobbies incude the study of other people's family trees. He is Nicholas Barrington, a 49-year-old diplomat whose last tour of duty was in charge of the British mission in Tehran and who, but for a last-minute operational switch by the Foreign Office, would now be British ambassador in Beirut. As it is, after a short spell at the United Nations, he was drafted back to London six months ago as ringmas-ter for the biggest diplomatic circus that London has known for years. In 1977, when Britain first played host, the summit was manageable enough for a determined James Callaghan to squeeze everyone into Number Ten. But in subsequent years it has grown into the biggest, but not necessarily most effective, jamboree of its kind. Last year the Americans tried to bring it under control in the more relaxed atmosphere of Williamsburg, and Mrs Thatcher has imbued her staff with similar good intentions.

Even so Mr Barrington settled into his temporary office in the Old Admiralty Building early this year. faced with the joy of organizing 1.000 delegates and officials and an estimated 3,000 press representatives into a worthwhile conference. "If all goes well, no doubt someone else will get the credit, and if not then I shall probably get the blame", he said cheerfully this week amid headquarters at Lancaster House. The size of the circus ruled out alternative venues, such as Leeds Castle in Kent. or Chevening.

Security remains a headache for Barrington and his 20-man team of organizing officials - which includes a special security adviser from the Foreign Office. Most of the leaders are staying at their ambassadors' residences and seven London hotels were block-booked for ministers and other functionaries nine months ago. The times it will take for the official convoys to converge upon Lancaster House from all these addresses have been measured to the nearest minute, President Reagan, as the senior guest, will enjoy the privilege of arriving last.

The number of police who will be on duty has not been disclosed. But all police leave has been cancelled and several thousand officers are expected to be assigned, on overt or covert missions, to safeguard Mrs Thatcher's guests. West End traffic will be suspended at certain times to let the convoys pass.

Mr Barrington, whose other interests include drawing and the theatre, has taken a lively personal interest in the more aesthetic side of the summit. Some of the mans and plans produced for visiting delegates and pressmen have been designed by himself. A venue for dinner on Friday night posed a problem, and he trawled round the West End and City in search of three rooms which were elegant intimate, convenient. and above all, interesting. Finally he milling workmen in the conference chose the Tudor Room in the National Portrait Gallery for the heads of government, the Royal Society of Arts for the foreign ministers, and the Bank of England for the finance ministers. Tomorrow night the guests will dine at: Downing Street and on Saturday at a banquet in Buckingham Palace. Saturday lunch at Lancaster House has been organized by Food from Britain, eight home firms providing smoked salmon, Norfolk turkey, apple mousse and English cheeses, washed down with bottles of Spots Farm 1981 and Adjestone 1982.

If security has been a problem, the media have been an even bigger one. Official news is unlikely to be plentiful during the first two days and the thought of 3,000 itinerant newsmen wandering through London with nothing better to do than "speculate" has made Whitehall uneasy about the strength of the pound. One solution seems to have been to provide plenty of photo-calls to keep the cameramen happy while plying reporters in the Connaught Rooms with abundant food and

But if this summit will be remembered for anything, short of an economic miracle, it could be the influence of privatization. Nearly 60 British firms and organizations have provided their goods and services free, in return for the opportunity to display their expertise before world leaders and the attendant press. Free ties, pens, and even madallions in presentation boxes from the Royal Mint, are among the gifts. For media representatives, there is a briefease provided by the Bank of Scotland

personal interest

and Standard Chartered Bank-Much of the electronic gadgetry in the press centre has been laid on without charge by companies anxious to display it.

The summit has taken six months to prepare and will last for three days, after which Mr Barrington will return to an assistant undersecretary's desk at the Foreign Office. The captains and kings will depart and work starts somewhere else on next year's summit.

raise his face from the mire in which he has chosen to plunge it. Yet when all this is said, the strike will have proved damaging not only economically but also for the Government's standing with many rank-and-file trade unionists. Simple victory for the Coal Board is not enough; much more should be done to make the miners see the strength of the Government's case. Like government, successful industrial management depends on consent and on the understanding of its workers. No government can afford too many enemies. Though there is no need to take too seriously Mr David Basnett's dramatic threats of the worst of all winters of discontent next year, there is increased restiveness in the public sector, and the Government needs to do more than it has been doing to make its case politically.

Ministers should also tread sensitively, and it was not helpful when Mr Tom King, the Employ-ment Secretary, suddenly revealed last weekend (in answer to journalists' questions) that the Trade Union Bill now ending its progress through Parliament may be amended to allow immunity only to those strikes which have been sanctioned by a majority in a ballot.

As the bill is now absurdly worded, unions are obliged to hold a strike ballot but can still declare a strike, with immunity, if the ballot has a no-strike majority. (Thus, theoretically, a strike could be declared with immunity on (say) a 30 per cent affirmative vote.) The anomaly arose because it was at first felt best not to pressure unions about the precise majority needed, and because it was assumed that in practice they would not flout an anti-strike majority.

So the proposed amendment, though it came as a bolt from the blue to Mr King's colleagues, is simply common sense. But its timing in the middle of the miners' strike (though this has given it added relevance) looked too much like devising law on the trot as a political expedient for current problems. What should have been in the Bill from the first looked like an antiunion gesture.

While the Government leaves Mr MacGregor to see Mr Scargill off, it needs to do more thinking about how to convince union members and financial solvency is to their it is not repeatedly rebutted. The own advantage, it should consider unfounded charge which has been what it can do where there are closed what it can do where there are closed pits to assist in bringing work to those who do take redundancy.

Two years after Disraeli's death an article in The Times observed that he had discerned the Conservative working man in the inarticulate mass of the English populace "as the sculptor perceives the angel prisoned in a block of marble". The Government needs that discernment today, and a more fluent tongue, as it attempts to liberate the individual trade unionists who have been used by the likes of Mr Scargill first time today; and the parleying between the board and the union has begun. The thing to hold on to at this stage is the commercial objective in opposition to which the strike was called. This is to close, over a reasonably short span of time, those pits from which, because of their geological properties or stage of depletion, coal can be dug only at a cost unacceptably greater than the price at which it can be sold in the marketplace. That is what matters: bellicose rhetoric of victory and defeat. siege and surrender, less so. Provided Ministers can point to the assertion of their commercial objective. Mr Scargill can make of it what he will, but the truth must be self-evident in the way the National Coal Board implements its plans.

Securing the commercial objective does not necessarily require total rigidity in respect of the board's previously announced contraction programme for 1984. Mr MacGregor has already indicated that there is scope for compromise over phasing, once the principle of contraction is accepted. Since then the cumulative loss of production from the strike and deterioration in the condition of many of the strike-bound collieries, which may delay or in some cases prevent their reopening. will have impinged on the assessed need for immediate reduction in the capacity of the industry, and on the rate of natural or redundancy-induced manpower wastage. That is one element in a possible settlement of the dispute. Another, also adumbrated by the board, is its examination of ways, in conjunction with other agencies, of bringing new business and work to communities which would have the heart Yard, which has been coordinatknocked out of them by pit closures. Palliative provision of 1 in the coalfields, was held by that kind was made by the steel some to be suspect as an corporation and should be embryonic rational directorate attempted by the coal board not settlement without a change of the minimum organization position by the NUM. The union necessary for the avoidance of will have to drop its hopeless national (political) direction of insistence that no pit shall be the police Nevertheless the winnable coal.

Sitting it out until the NUM is ready to budge on the main issue probably means prolongation of the mass manoeuvres of pickets and police. No one can contemplate the spectacle of force, threat and violence at the heart of an industrial dispute without dismay. It was good to have Mr Kinnock's forthright condemnation of violence on the picket line last week, however late in the day. It would be better still to have an equally outspoken repudiation from the leaders of the trade union movement.

It is from within their movement that the offence has arisen. They must know that a challenge of numbers threatening violence will be met by counter-force. The miners' strike is in its will, if driven to it, go beyond he thirteenth week; the House of customary bounds of civil policy commons debates it fully for the ing. They may then appear, or be made to appear, hostile to arge numbers of working men who are normally no more criminal than the rest of us, and by extension the police may be made to appear hostile to the communities from which the picketing strikers come. The police then cease to be seen as belonging to hose communities, and are seen as set over against them. A process is begun, and sedulously fortered, that seeks to set police and people apart. Malicious and subversive minds then seek to exploit incidents where weight of numbers and overt violence oblige the police to respond with riot gear and snatch tactics. The spiral is well documented in the Irish corner of the kirgdom.

The only beneficiaries are those who seek to fracture and disorder society in pursuit of political and social goals which the constitutional machinery will not deliver because they are not commonly wanted. High among the victims of that degenerative condition of society are trade union constitutionalists and the people they represent. Of course the miners strike under the generalship of Mr Scargill has not taken us far down that road. But it is a mad; and feet are on it. It behoves all parties directly or indirectly implicated to consider very carefully where they are.

A conference of chief officers of police and members of local police authorities happened to be meeting last week when some of the worst scenes of violence were being enacted elsewhere. Worries on the local government side went beyond the cost of it all and the strain on police manpower and resources, extending to the spiriture of democratic accountability for policing. dispute to the advantage of Mr Scargill, who is playing it that way.

The arguments are persuasive. but they leave the new remedy, of injunction followed by limitless raids on a union's funds in case of persistent disobedience. looking, in relation to the largest and most picketed dispute since the remedy became available, decidedly like those deterrent weapons whose efficacy is not to be doubted, but the consequences of whose efficacy are not to be contemplated. There is nothing effective about deter-rence if it can be so easily and persistently ignored.

Ministers too will have to examine their experience of this strike. They acknowledge the need to review the law pertaining to public order, which includes the behaviour of pickets. They should also as a result of the disclosures yesterday reflect more generally on the coordination of their policies in the nationalized industries, and in the area of industrial relations as they most particularly affect the public sector.

The legal privileges of trade unions had become excessive and too subject of abuse. They had to be curbed. There was an imbalance of advantage between the parties to collective bargaining. That had to be redressed. Individual trade unionists needed, and still need protection against petty tyranny by union officials. The pretensions of trade union magnates to an exofficio place in the government of the country had to be punctured. These were all necessary correctives to law and custom that had evolved in a way that had clearly become detrimental to the general good. The corrective process is not complete; much still needs to be done in this parliament. The trade union movement has naturally portrayed these correctives as evidence that the government's real appetite is not for trade union reform but for the general eclipse of trade unionism. Of course free trade unions are necessary to development in continuity of the democratic industrial society we have, and they are necessary to adjustment in continuity to the profound changes in technology and working practices that are already above the horizon. But not exclusively so.

Free trade unions are a component in a society grounded in consent, and they hould be seen as such, though we should not be bullied by their spokesmen into forgetting that they represent only a minority of the working population.

if their resentment at being deprived of legal immunities which they now neither need nor deserve were to drive union leaders more into the arms of elements that are malignant to the established order, that would only confirm how important and timely is a policy on industrial relations which seeks to establish a much more direct link between the enjoyment of a privileged position under the law and the exercise of some greater responsibility consistent with that privilege. That applies not just to the NUM; it applies to them all.

Sir, In responding to your leading article of June 4 ("From Lestrade to Newman") may I first declare an interest, for I write not only as a chief constable but as Director of Police Extended Interviews, which charges me with the task of overseeing arrangements for the selection of candidates with suitable intellectual and personal qualities for places at the Police Staff College, Bramshill-

This selection procedure applies not only to talented young men and women who have joined the service as recruits in the normal way, but to those who opt to take advantage of the avenues for accelerated promotion provided by the graduate entry scheme. At a higher level, it is also concerned with the selection of those already holding posts as middle managers in the police who aspire to fill very senior appointments by way of the senior command course at Bramshill,

It may be reassuring to your readers to learn that chief officers share your concern that the leaders of Britain's police in the next century should be fully equipped for their task. This is demonstrated by the fact that in January of this year 43 of Britain's top police officers, worried by a dearth of applicants for senior appointments, devoted a weekend seminar to this very

As you imply, academic qualification, intellectual capacity, personal qualities, linked with development training are of paramount importance, but the seminar also identified a number of other key factors which need close scrutiny by those who control the destiny of Britain's police if the very best material is to be found to fill top appointments in the future.

First and foremost, there is a need to provide sufficient incentives in terms of financial reward and conditions of service to ensure every encouragement for those with the necessary talents to uproot family and home in order to move from one force area to another in search of experience and responsibility.

Even though our junior and intermediate ranks are recompensed, at the top level the police service compares unfavourably with industry. There is a need also to develop a system of career planning which will ensure that those who have proved themselves are encouraged to seek appointments beyond the boundaries of their own force areas. The police service already offers an exciting and challenging career, but I suggest that the path to the top must be more clearly signposted for those with exceptional talent and vision who are contemplating taking their first steps on the beat, including many of the 4.176 graduates now serving in our ranks. Yours etc.

Prince and architects

From Mr John Crookshank Sir, The very vehemence of the response to Prince Charles's com-ments on modern British architecture by some leading architects leads the lay observer to believe that he may have hit the nail on the head.

The only part of his speech with which I would not agree was the disparaging comment about the proposed Mies van der Rohe building being better suited to downtown Chicago". Chicago is, in fact, rich in good modern buildings, in addition, of course, to the early skyscrapers for which it is famous, and so are most American cities.

The Americans seem to be able to blend new construction in with the older buildings most effectively with examples such as San Francisco, Philadelphia and the new wing of Washington's National Gallery being only some of many.

There are several older cities which are still fairly grim, but somehow one feels that in, say, five years' time places like Baltimore. Pittsburg and Dallas will be architecturally more pleasing than Glasgow, Manchester and Birming-ham because the American architects have more sense of time and place, because they are given their heads more in commercial terms and, I feel, because an influential Union but to supply the analysis proportion of the citizens are proud and comprehension of Soviet of their cities and want them to society demanded by strategic reflect this pride in architectural excellence.

Politics at PNL

From Mr Neil Fletcher

Sir, Few people can be less fitted than Lord Annan (May 28) to criticise the performance of the governors at the Polytechnic of North London. His immoderate onslaught has besmirched the reputation of many honourable governors of the polytechnic, who have served conscientiously with little public recognition for years; he has unjustifiably damaged the good name of the polytechnic, and, although this worries me less, he has belittled himself in the process. Perhaps of all polytechnics and colleges in the country the Polytechnic of North London has the best record of recruiting black students. many of them Londoners and on degree courses only because of the access courses and special entry arrangements that have enabled them in their twenties and thirties to fulfil their latent potential. The PNL also runs courses in

Sir, In July, 1983, in a major review of the international dimension of economic recovery, this association expressed its disappointment at the "collective complacency" that had characterised last year's economic summit at Williamsburg Virginia. With another conoctunity to agree

With another opportunity to agree on such measures available at the London economic summit this weekend, can the world's political and business leaders afford a further round of platitudes? In particular, will the other world leaders, especially those in the EEC facing important European... Parliament elections, summon up the politica will to act together to oblige the American Administration to take urgent action on the bloated US $190m deficit, which is one factor raising interest rates and which thus so clearly threatens recovery in Енторе?

In 1981, when there existed a large amount of unused economic capacity in the world, the US deficit was not only defensible but was beginning, in the short term, to fuel recovery. It is now the one year of US private sector borrowing. For that recovery to be aborted would dash what hope remains to the 30,000,000 unemployed people in the OECD area.

In the meantime, can a means be devised by which the main drive of international financial support given to the Third World countries is designed to alleviate to a tolerable level the interest rates which they pay, without the destabilising effect of altering the effective payments to

Finally, chambers of commerce, by their very nature, are well aware that jobs depend on trade. So the economic summit must vigorously tackle the threats towards protectionism in international trade, whether among the advanced countries or between them and the British industry and commerce, however, continues to lay emphasis on fair trading policies and realistic exchange rates. Britain's UK trade deficit with western Europe has increased from just over £2bn in 1981 to one of over £6.5bn in 1983 and one of over £1.8bn in the first three months of 1984.

British businessmen remain concerned over the shop floor effects of these trends in trade; they will naturally have little patience with talk of letting the so-called "smoke-stack" (i.e., manufacturing) industries "go to the Third World". Yours faithfully,

Conflicting creeds

From the Reverend P. R. Forster Sir, In response to the letter from the Dean of Durham (May 23) and your subsequent leading article (May 26) two things need to be said.

Firstly, that although the 1938 report, entitled Doctrine in the Church of England, acknowledged as a minority viewpoint the ideas now put forward by the Dean and Bishop-designate of Durham, moves at the time to use this report as a basis for an official restatement of Anglican belief was rejected.

Had official recognition been given to the questioning of the basic statements of the historic creeds of Christianity about the virgin birth and physical resurrection of Jesus, one hesitates to imagine the consequences of such a formal declaration of beresy. The ancient churches of Christen-dom, Orthodox and Roman Catholic, would have little enthusiasm for any ecumenical discussions with us. Furthermore, many members of the Church of England, clergy and lay, would leave to join

Teachers' pay claim

From Professor D. Cameron Watt Sir, HMG has just offered a 4.2 per cent salary increase to university teachers. As a result of five years of salary increases consistently lower than the annual rate of inflation. university teachers' salaries are now 22 per cent less, in real terms, than they were in 1979. The salaries of many professors, frozen for five years of the previous seven, have declined even more precipitately in

The AUT (Association of University Teachers) has rejected this claim and called on its local associations to take "appropriate action". In so doing it is betraying still further the stupidity and betrayal of the duties and obligations of its members begun when it imported a professional trade unionist as its general secretary, and affiliated itself to the TUC.

An academic's principal obligations, as a professional, are to his field of learning and to his students. To be an academic is a profession. For the council of AUT to call for "appropriate action" is to use a deliberate ambiguity designed to put the responsibility for action which

Assembling for school worship

From the Headmaster of Friern Barnet Grammar School Sir, On July 24, 1943, your leader writer, commenting on Mr Butler's and Mr Chuter Ede's White Paper, Educational Reconstruction, described it as a landmark in English education and said that it promised the greatest and grandest educational advance since 1870".

Out of Educational Reconstruction grew the 1944 Education Act. an important part of which is now under fire. The threatened clause concerns compulsory school assection 25 of the Act:

It declares, in effect, that the school day in every county and voluntary school, so long as its premises are practical for the purpose, should start with collective worship on the part of all pupils. It is being suggested that this clause should be excised or redrafted so as to allow schools to have "greater flexibility in meeting the needs of a multi-cultural society". Such a change should be resisted by both the legislature and the churches, R. A. Butler built into the rubric of the Act more than enough flexibility to cope with modern circumstances.

For example, the term "collective worship" connotes a wide range of activities: listening quietly to a reading or a piece of music, saying "Amen" at the end of a prayer, applauding a school football result or simply being together in visible community. Even in 1944 the concept "worship" was pretty fluid.

Elsewhere in the Act sectamanism was explicitly proscribed with the words: "the collective act of worship should not be distinctive of any particular denomination". Parents who nevertheless sensed a religious stricture operating in these arrangements were enabled by the Act to withdraw their children from assemblies on conscientious grounds.

Further allowances for administrative flexibility on the part of local education authorities, governors and, by implication, school architects were written in to the clause cited above.

Part of the genius of the Butler Act has been the serviceability of its rubric through forty years of substantive educational change. Its longevity is not yet exhausted. I respectfully suggest that while ours remains a country where religion is "by law established" in the structures of the state, it is both unnecessary and imprudent to write out of law the encouragement of compulsory worship in our state schools.

JOHN PEARMAN, Headmaster, Friem Barnet Grammar School, Friern Barnet Road, N11. May 31.

Badly lent, badly spent ences which are essential to a great From Mr Paul Barcau musician. Pain, grief, happiness, cuphoria – all these must be reflected in his, or her performance.

Sir. Your leading article. "Badly lent, badly spent" (May 26), fails to mention what was by far the most important single factor responsible for the large increase in borrowing by the less developed countries in the 1970s. It was the successive explosions in the price of oil.

This created chaos in international balances of payments: huge surpluses for OPEC countries, comparable deficits for oil importers. For the poorer, non-oil producing countries these deficits had to be financed by external borrowing or aid.

That assistance should, ideally, have been provided by the appropriate international institutions, the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and its "soft loan" subsidiary. The task proved far too great for the resources at their disposal. The "recycling" of the surpluses of some into the deficits of others fell to the commercial banks.
Admittedly some lenders over-stepped the bounds of orthodox banking discretion. But they pre-vented a sequence of "sovereign" defaults which could have resulted in a situation graver than that which exists today.

Unwittingly, perhaps, the commercial banks saved the day. They deserve better than the implied judgment of your leader writer. "let them stew in their own juice". Yours faithfully. PAUL BAREAU

Van Dyck's Venetia bought by the portrait gallery

By Geraldine Norman Sale Room Correspondent

The National Portrait Gallery yesterday announced the acquisition of a superb portrait from an unknown source: Van Dyck's allegorical depiction of "Venetia Stanley, Lady Digby, as Prudence".

Its value on the open market could well be as much as £1m but the gallery would say only that it had been valued at "several hundred thousand". and that the gallery had only had to pay about a third of the valuation as the private treaty sale was exempt from tax.

Venetia Stanley was a celebrated beauty and courtesan and was, in her youth, "kept as his concubine" by the third Earl of Dorset. She graduated from a life of sin to marry Sir Kenelm Digby, "the handsomest gentleman of England".

Venetia proved a model wife but died in 1633, only seven years after her marriage. Sir Kenelm mourned extravagantly. He commissioned Van Dyck to paint her on her death bed. Van Dyck also painted a life size allegorical portrait as a posthumous tribute and was so delighted with it that he then painted a smaller version (39 by 31 ins) the one acquired by the portrait gallery.

The painting was taken to France in the Civil War and is recorded in the 1660s in collection of Cardinal Mazaria. It then disappeared until a painting of similar dimensions and subject, presumably the same, appeared at Christie's in Animal 'magnetic compass' found

By Pearce Wright, Science Editor Moreover the navigation signals used by one aquatic family, the Yellowsin tuna called Thunnus albacares, are obtained from microscopic crystals of magnetite (the natural black oxide of iron, with formula Fe₃O₄) in tissue in the skull of the fish. The discovery of the magnetite crystals is reported in Science, the weekly periodical of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, by Michael Walker, of the University of Hawaii, Joseph Kirschvink and Shin-Bin Chang, of the California Institute of Technology, and Andrew Dizon, of the National Marine Fisheries Service at La Jolla, California.

Subsequent work has also revealed similar crystals in salmon. However, the main study of tuna followed research show-ing it was possible to repro-duce conditioned responses to earth-strength magnetic fields in Thunnus albacares. The detection, extraction and classification of the magnetically susceptible mineral was schieved by an intricate procedure outlined in their report. But the crystals have a shape which is unique to biochemically formed magnet-

Each crystal is about onemillionth of a millimetre in size, arranged apparently in a chain or cluster which is enough to give the fish a sensitive system for following the magnetic lines of the Earth's field.

The relatively high concentration of magnetite in a small cavity within the bone of the skull has helped in locating a sense organ for which other scientists have been searching. In describing their results the zoologists say: "Even in the homing pigeon and honey bee, detailed localization of magnetite has proved difficult to ascertain, and the particles have not been isolated or characterized previously". Source: Science. May 18, Vol 224. No 4650. 1984.

The council has had more than 300 replies to its Green Paper proposals. The rebel small stockbrokers seem finally to have mustered enough candidates to make a contest of the forthcoming council elections. And, most interesting of all, those who are unhappy about a simple abandonment of the split between brokers and jobbers now seem to have progressed beyond mere Luddite objection to change, to a genuinely positive response.

The pressure to make London dealing competitive with other centres was almost bound to make brokers deal on the same net basis as their large scale foreign market-making counterparts. The stockjobbers soon perceived that they could spread their dealing expertise and financing overheads by dealing direct with customers.

Instead of outright opposition to the inevitable, therefore, the doubters are instead moving to a compromise position/ beyond, but consistent with, the options laid out by the council. This is to divide the Exchange's equity dealing into two tiers (or three if you count the Unlisted Securities Market).

This two-tier option, hinted at in the Governor of the Bank of England's speech at Liverpool a fortnight ago and firstifully explored in this column, would allow dual capacity for the top shares which are of main interest to international and institutional trading - at least the components of the FTSE 100 share index — while maintaining the present split between broking and dealing for the bulk of second and third line stocks.

This is not, as might at first appear, just a second-rate British compromise that emasculates the effects of change. Its virtue is that it applies the main advantage of single capacity trading, which is the protection of investors who want to buy or sell at the best price, to the sectors of the market where that protection is most

It is clear that, with dual capacity, such protection can only be afforded by full information of the prices of deals through an American-style tickertape. Yet the lending firms seem reluctant to submit to the full rigours of instant information. In the big share markets, competition between market-makers itself provides some protection. In the smaller shares, i does not.

This virture could be greater than the administrative perils of a two-tier marker.

Unless there is a sharp recovery in the price, Mogain will have to wield the underwriters stick leaving 17.6 million unwanted Guiness shares floating around the market and depressing the price for months into the future.

This in turn could cause havoc, in the short tem at least, with the plans of chief executive. Mr Ernest Saunders, to make important strategic acquisitions in the British and American drinks trade.

Guinness is without doubt paying a high price for Martin but it was the price needed to see off the main rival, W H Smith, and the many others like Imperial Group which were reported to be lurking in the wings. It has also been through the Martin figures time and time again with the help of a team of management consultants and believes it can achieve with the 490 outlet company what it did with its existing 130 strong Lavells chain of confectioners tobacconists and news-

Lavells achieves a profit margin of about 6 per cent, while Martin's return on sales is still languishing at below 3 per cent. The potential for improvement by cutting administrative expenses alone is significant, while more adventurous merchandising and display could provide a big boost to sales per customer.

Mr Saunders has proved himself a ruthless surgeon during the retrenchment period at Guinness. It looks as if he may have to embark on he expansion phase with the burden of a cash penalty through the vagaries of the stock market.

Long holiday for a depleted Neddy

In the absence of the TUC, it is left to the Confederation of British Industry to play opposition to the Government at the regular meetings of the National Economic Development Council. But sometimes the roles are even more bizarrely Yesterday, for example, Mr Tom King, the Secretary of State for Employment was at Neddy before going off to Brussels where EEC ministers will be discussing ways of discussing the working week. Mrs cher has made plain her disapproval of the German trade unions' campaign for a 35-hour week. However, as good Europeans, government ministers are always prepared to discuss anything on the agenda, and Mr King was no exception.

The TUC would naturally have been in favour of a shorter week, which it sees as a way of creating more jobs. But the CBI has no illusions: we cannot its representatives at Neddy argued forcefully, have Britain working part-time while Japan works full-Neddy, meanwhile, has voted itself a long summer holiday, with no meetings in July or August. By September 26, the first date set for the autumn, and a meeting traditionally chaired by the Prime Minister, the TUC will have met and discussed the Neddy boycott. The TUC will also have elected a new general secretary, and Neddy is anxious to see him take his place. According to Mr John Cassels, Neddy's director general, "The Council is a tripartite body and one of our parties is missing. The office is run for its three shareholders, and this does not mean the TUC are not shareholders.

Gearing is still high at 70 per cent and the group must take steps to reduce this. JFB must be grateful that at least Forgemasters is not a drain on its precious cash flow. It should also begin to see the benefits of another joint venture which linked its aluminium and copper interests with those of BICC.

Progress to date has been better than expected and it should record a profit at the vear end. This will be wiped out by the inevitable rationalization costs which have been incurred, but in 1984/85 it will be a valuable contributor to profits for JFB.

The share price was un-changed at 16p yesterday. A lot of repair work is still needed on JFB's reserves, but for the patient and the bold it is an interesting recovery stock.

Smokestack Britain started spluttering badly about Christmas time, according to valve-maker Pegler-Hattersley, which has seen no CBI-style recovery in demand. Process plant spending has been relatively unchanged in Britain compared with 1982/83; and plumbing products competition in the building division hit margins.

 Expansion continues at home and abroad. We opened 150,000 sq. ft. of new selling space in the U.K. where we invested £130 million in building and refurbishment.

• We are developing new product areas and experimenting with Chargecard facilities.

• It is our policy to buy British goods wherever possible. Some 90% of our textiles, and foods that can be grown in temperate climates, is produced at home. Increased demand for British goods means more British jobs. We have recruited an additional 2,500 Marks and Spencer staff during the year.

• We have been honoured with the Queen's Award for Export Achievement and (jointly with I.C.S. Limited) the Queens Award for Technological Achievement.

 Marks and Spencer is celebrating its Centenary Year by allocating £3.4 million to local community projects. The projects have been selected by our staff who have themselves raised more than £350,000. • In July Lord Sieff will relinquish the position of Chairman which he has held since 1972. He will then become President and remain a Director of the Company. His successor, Lord Rayner, assumes the Chairmanship in addition to his present responsibilities as Chief Executive.

COMPANY NEWS

Sarah Hogg and Peter Wilson-Smith act as guides to the tenth annual economic summit Issues that matter to the people at the top statesmen and bag-carriers assemble at London for the annual economic summit. The following brief guide is intended to help you through the pomp and persiflage:

1. How we got there This is the tenth in a series of summits that began in 1975, the depth of the post-oil-shock recession. Since then the seven members of the summit club the United States, Japan, West Germany, France, Britain, Italy and Canada - have taken turns to play host. There has been an increasing tendency to choose picturesque locations outside the capital cities - eg. Venice (1980) or Versailles (1982) - as the summit has become more and more of a media event. President Reagan held last year's summit in the reconstructed colonial glories of Williamsburg Mrs Thatcher, in sublime disregard of the traffic problems, is exploiting unreconstructed London, as Mr James Callaghan did in 1977.

2. Who's who The heads of government of the seven summit countries are attending, flanked by foreign and finance ministers. Italy and Canada, the two smallest economies represented, set the limits of experience. It is Signor Bettic:: Craxi's first summit, and M Pierre Trudeau's seventh and last. It may, of course, be the last call for President Reagan or Prime Minister Nakasone: both the American president and the Japanese prime minister face re-election or re-selection before the end of shadowy member of the summit club: the President of the European Commission, M Gaston Thorn. All four leding EEC governments are members in their own right, so M Thorn has a half role representing the rest. The least visible but most vital guests are the summit "sherpas" - officials responsible for the pre-summit nego-tiations, including the drafting of the communique. Britain's chief sherpa is Sir Robert Armstrong, head of the Cabinet

Office and the Civil Service. 3. The extras About 1,000 officials will be attending, and about 3,000 journalists. Providing for this cast-list helps bring the bill for the summit, met by the British Government, to about £2.5m. This covers the elaborate security for heads of state, providing and equipping the Connaught Rooms with closedcircuit TV, 24-hour refreshments, a bureau de change and even theatre booking facilities for the media. But "Food from Britain", a company set up last year to promote native deli-cacies, is helping feed journal-ists, the Royal Mint is stamping a special summit medal and, to help keep costs down, a number of British companies (eg British Telecom, BL) are providing free or cut-price services. Burton is even providing a special sum-4. Scene changes The main summit talks tomorrow and Saturday take place in I ancaster House. Foreign ministers have been allotted the state drawing room, finance ministers the Long Gallery (for target practice?), the heads of government will meet in the Music Room (which Mrs Thatcher hopes will induce

5. Security headaches The Americans have not thought much of British security ever since the little episode of the Queen's bedroom visitor. So there has been particular difficulty about the arrangements for protection of President Reagan. For the first time it is being publicly admitted that some of his bodyguards will be carrying arms. 6. The topics In between, or through the junketing, the heads of governmnt have an "informal" agenda to get through. Econ-omics is strictly the business of the summit, with political issues reserved for meal-times. Before, after or during the summit, Mrs Thatcher will be "bilateral" meetings having with all the visiting leaders; President Reagan has already been here most of the week, and Prime Minister Nakasone is staving on when the others go home. And the visitors will all

• Relations with the Soviet Union. President Reagan has already made his plea to the Soviet Union to return to the arms negotiation table. Prime Minister Nakasone has echoed it. The Japanese are likely to be ssed on their contribution to the defence burden borne by other summit countries. But the long-running dispute between the United States and other governments on trade with the Soviet Union and its satellites seems to have simmered down

● The Gulf War. No very profound conclusions are expected on how to end it, contain or simply minimize the damage to summit countries. The Japanese have been pressing for new oil-sharing arrangements, but these have largely been put in place undr the aegis of the International Energy Agency.

International terrorism. Mrs Thatcher is particularly keen to have this discussed, after international negotiations at be playing partners with each Central America. Again, Mrs Thatcher was keen to stress British interests at her presummit briefing. But the topic is of rather less interest to the other summitteers than to the

Canadians. The economic agenda Broadly, six issues have been on the sherpas' memo pads: • The recovery. This summit was originally planned as a confidence-booster, a re-affir-mation of existing policies and the need to keep a downward growth, at about 4 per cent for the world economy as a whole, has been accelerating for the past two years andthis summit was intended to celebrate its improvement. Since this original game-plan, however, other issues have rather forced their Interest rates. European governments have become increasingly sharp-tongued about the level of American interest rates. Chancellor Hel-mut Khol said this week that we will emphatically point out to American friends their responsibility for the level of world interest rates. The British Government has made it clear will be asking President Reagan for a "statement of International debt. This, obviously, is linked with the problem of interest rates. The American Government had intent" on further reduction in agenda, but without success. resident Mitterrand sees it as his particular role to speak out for the developing countries. though he has a challenger. from a rather more conservative perspective, in Prime Minister Nakasone. President Mitterrand says he will be pressing for a "new global dialogue". Prim Minister Nakasone echoes his British and German colleagues in complan-ing about American interest • Structural change. This is partly the result of an initiative taken at the Versailles summit. which set up a working group on technology and employment, whose report will formally be presented to this summit. But the issue also reflects American criticism of European economies, which are seen as suffering from "Euroclerosis" - a kind of hardening of the arteries of industrial development. Exchange rates. This, again, is a follow-up to a summit initiative. President Mitterrand has been particularly critical of the way the system of floating exchange rates is working; the rest, excluding the Americans, are less worried about the general issue, but do not like the behaviour of the dollar. After eral surveillance" by the International Monetary Fund of exchange rate policies. It has already reported to the May meeting of the Group of 10 industrial nations and a similar report will be presented to the summit. The work goes on, but so far has reached no very dramatic conclusions for or gainst floating rates. Trade. One of the strongest continuing features of summit discussions has been the annual commitment to resist - this year's buzz-word = "roll-back" protectionism. The Americans, backed by the Japanese, are calling for a new round of trade negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The British do not mind. to accelerate existing Gart work programmes and bring forward tariff reductions agreed under the previous Tokyo round. The French are opposed to a new Gatt round, from which they do not expect to gain much.

8 The results The draft communique is said to be short and "workmanlike". Essential preplanned ingredients include a passage on the pursuit of non-inflationary growth and another on structural adjustment. On contentious issues: No formal "statement of by the Americans, but some impersonal phraseology on the need for budgetary control and the necessity for reducing interest rates.

 With suitable cavears about timing and content (will services be included, for example?), a pledge to prepare plans for a new Gatt round will be agreed. Reconfirmation of the "case by case" approach to inter-national debt negotiations; there is no general support for new institutional solutions such interest-rate "capping".

 At the political end of the list, international terrorism will feature (though not, probably, in a separate declaration of

9. The wild card But the Iran-Iraq war could still overturn the Sherpas, best-laid plans. The smooth patina of platitudes on the Gulf war is most vulnerable to abrasive world events. And the neat demarcation of issues for discussion is not proof against sudden change in the summiteers' real concerns. The essence of "informal conversation", after all, is that not even the sherpas can tell their leaders

Yule Catto raises bid group

By Jeremy Warner

Yule Catto has raised its takeover bid for Donald Macpherson, the Cover Plus paints October to April were just index 35 million bags (each bag is 60 kilogrammes or about group, to £24.7m, topping a rival bid - which had won the backing of Macpherson directors - from the Finnish paints company Tikkurila

Yule Catto, a plantations, building products and chemicals group, once had the approval of Macpherson for its takeover advances but that was before the Finnish bid and there was no immediate response to the new terms yesterday.

Mr Rex Chester, chairman of Macpherson, was impressed by the way the Finnish company operates in the paints industry and its plans for Macpherson and the may feel there is more logic in a merger with Tikkurila The new terms are 34 ordinary shares and 40 preference shares plus £15 in cash for every 100 Macpherson shares. On the stock market, Macpherson shares rose 6p to 132p - 4p below the value placed on them by the new bid.

This is a new bid to be made in the 12-week-old battle for control of Macpherson, one of the few independent paint companies left in Britain. The battle began with an unwanted £13.6m bid from the Swedish paints company AB Wilh Becker, Macpherson found a white knight in the form of Yule Catto but its bid of £22m was topped by an all-cash offer from Tukkurila

The price squeeze has led some analysts to argue that producer and consumer stocks are lower than had been thomselve But the producer are lower than had been public forecast of Macpherson public forecast of Macpherson thought. But the producers will profits for the year to the end of want to inflate both their stock next October had been made, it and exports figures because next | understood that Macpherson year's export quotas will be would be recording not less based on them.

Court of Appeal

Transnational divorces not recognized

Divisional Court in R v Registrar General, Ex parte Mushas ([1977]

In that case, it was held that a talag divorce obtained by a Pakistani, who had written the raliag divorce obtained by a Pakistani, who had written the initiating notice of talaq in the UK, could not be recognized under section 3, since it was not obtained in proceedings outside the British Isles" as required by section 2.

However, despite the close similarity on its facts, Mr Simon Brown, though submitting that it was correctly decided, felt able to place little or no reliance on that decision. For, as Lord Fraser pointed out in Quaniv Quani at p 816 that decision was evidently based on a misunderstanding of the effect of the Muslim Family Laws Ordinance of 1961. And that Ordinance of 1961. And that misunderstanding clearly coloured the whole of the Divisional Court's

Effectively, therefore, the court had to answer the second question without the benefit of any authority, save the careful and lucid judgment were capable of more than one construction. But they had to be read in the whole of the context.

The wording of sections 2 and 3 (1) when read together, in the

(1) when read together, in the court's judgment, made it clear that in using the phrase "judicial or other proceedings", in the course of its definition of an "overseas divorce", the legislature contemplated (a) one set of proceedings only (b) a set of proceedings which only, (b) a set of proceedings which had been instituted in the same country as that in which the relevant divorce was ultimately obtained.

On any other footing the phrase "at the date of the institution of the proceedings in the country in which it was obtained" in section 3 (1) would be inept. That phrase in its context manifestly referred to proceedings of any nature mea-tioned in section 2 (a), whether of a judicial or other nature.

It followed that, in the court's judgment, the judge was right in deciding that the requirement in section 2 (a), that the overseas divorce must have been obtained by means of proceedings in a country.

the entirety of the relevant "proceedings", whatever they might have been, must have taken place in

In the present cases, the entirety of the relevant "proceedings" did not take place in Pakistan because was no such date as "the date of the institution of the proceedings in the country in which the divorce was obtained.

Lord Diplock in Quazi v Quazi at p804 pointed out that the purpose of the recognition Act was to enable the United Kingdom to give effect in its domestic law to the Hague which the toleverhow was designed to cure as that of "limping marriages", that is to say "marriages that were recognized in some jurisdictions as taving been validly dissolved, but in other jurisdictions as still subsisting".

The court had some sympathy with that submission. Nevertheless the court was far from certain that it exclusively outside the United Kingdom or by means of proceedings which took place exclusively within the United Kingdom.

The only authority to which the court had been referred in which the applicability of sections 2 and 3 to a trans-national divorce had been considered was the decision of the Divisional Court in P. v. Revistane. of the Rolls, Lord Justice Slade and Lord Justice Parker [Judgment delivered May 24]

Where a Muslim Pakistani national pronounced talag in England and then notified his wife England and then notified his wife and the Chairman of the Union Council in Pakistan, thereby effecting a divorce recognized by Pakistani law, that divorce would not be recognized in English law under the provisions of the Recognition of Divorces and Legal Senarations Act 1971.

Separations Act 1971.

The Court of Appeal so stated in dismissing appeals by the applicants, Chulam Fatima and Shafeena Bi from the decisions of Mr Justice Taylor. In each case the applicants had sought leave to enter the United kingdom as the fiance of her sponsor, a UK resident of Pakistani nationality. Each sponsor, a Mus-lim, had purportedly dissolved his previous marriage to his Pakistani previous marriage to his Pakistani wife by pronouncing a talaq against her in England, making a statutory declaration before an English solicitor that he had done so and then sending a copy of that document to the wife and the Chairman of the relevant union council in Pakistan.

Chairman of the relevant union council in Pakistan.

In each case, the immigration officer, not being satisfied that the marriage had been effectively dissolved according to English law, was not satisfied that the intended marriage between the applicant and her sponsor could take place within, a reasonable time and refused entry. Each applicant sought judicial

Each applicant sought judicial review of the immigration officer's decision. The judge had held that in each case the talaq divorce was by English law ineffective to dissolve the sponsor's first marriage.

The 1971 Act provides under section 2: "Sections 3 to 5 of this Act shall have effect... as respects the recognition in Great Britain of the validity of overseas divorces . . . that is to say divorces . . . which – (a) have been obtained by means of judicial or other proceedings in any country outside the British Isles; and (b) are effective under the law of 2 If the relevant "proceedings" took place partly in England and partly in Pakistan, were the divorces capable of satisfying the conditions of section 2 (a)?

Considering the first question: in Quazi r Quazi (1980) AC 744) the House of Lords held that the words "other proceedings" in section 2 (a) of the 1971 Act were not to be limited to quasi-judicial proceedings, which were officially recognized in the country in which they

Mr Kadri strongly urged that the court should not by its decision in these cases leave the two sponsors with "limping marriages" which were recognized in Pakistan, but not in the 'UK, as having been dissolved. Once one accepted, as the House of Lords had held, that the phrase "other proceedings" in section 2 (b) was not limited to quasi-judicial proceedings, it was difficult to see how one could properly isolate the first essential step in the chain of events that had to take place before a talaq divorce was effective under Pakistani law (that is, the pronouncement of the talaq) from the other steps and say that it did not would be the policy of the legislature to encourage the obtaining of "divorces by post" by Pakistani nationals resident in the UK by other steps and say that it did not itself form part of the "relevant means of the talag procedure.

The court could therefore see no obvious reasons of legislative policy sufficient to justify giving section 2 (a) of the recognition Act a meaning other than that which the wording of the subsection in its context.

The court upheld, with the judge, that the Pakistani talaq divorces of the two sponsors did not satisfy the conditions of section 2 (a) and that the immigration officer was in each case entitled to take the view that he could not be esticified that the

In the court's judgment, the judge was right in deciding, as he did, that the pronouncement itself formed part of the relevant "proceedings" for the purpose of section 2 and that those proceedings took place partly in England and partly in Pakistan. As to the second question: the two divorces in the present cases had been aptly described in the course of argument as "trans-

Justices have discretion to rehear case

Lanceshire County Council v Clarke

Where justices had erroneously-held there was no case to answer, they had a discretion, where their clerk had not taken a note of evidence, when the case was remitted to them, to rehear the prosecution evidence and defeace cross-examination, the Queen's Bench Divisional Court held on May 22. The court allowed the prosecutor's appeal by way of case stated and remitted the matter to the same bench of Lancaster Justices.

LORD JUSTICE WATKINS, with whom Mr Justice Mann agreed, said that the Divisional Court had no power to remit the matter to the justices for hearing by way of a retrial [www.Maydew r Flint (The Times, May 16, 1984)] but their Lordships would not interfere with the discretion of the justices when they continued the case to rehear the prosecution evidence and allow the defence to cross-examine upon that evidence in order to refresh their memories where the justices clerk had not taken a note of the prosecution or ideas. of the prosecution evidence at the first hearing.

Rugby Union: England's scrum half is key for second international Leap-frogging to fame on the veld

There is an old-fashioned air about England's new scrum half, Richard Hill has close-cropped ginger hair and a rollup-your-sleeves, no-nonsense attitude which characterized another England scrum-half, who also made his first international appearance in South Africa,

Hill, who was 23 in May, won his first cap against South Africa on Saturday, after making his way through rugby's first class ranks in quick time. It was only in April, 1983 that he was invited to join Bath for whom he played all of last season, rather than represent Exeter University. where he was in the fourth year of a physical education course.

He has come from behind Steve Smith, Nigel Meiville, Nick Youngs and Richard Harding. Injuries to Smith and Melville may have excepted his path but he rich. may have smoothed his path, but he gives the impression that, having established himself, he will not be displaced lightly. He has a capacity for hard work which is the envy and despair of many of his England colleagues.

Concentrates on priorities

He welcomes the responsibility that the pivotal position of scrum half requires.

After captaining his university and various England representative student sides, he found when he joined Bath that his prime function was to feed John Horton, the international stand-off half who would take the play-making decisious. That, too, has changed. Bath have recognized and eucouraged his vision for the game.

"For a scrum half, the pass is the most important thing and the ability to break the next most important", Hill says with decision. He has worked on his spinting but has tended to neglect his kicking, not correasonably, since in the limited time he has available he prefers to concentrate on his two main priorities, leaving the kicking to Horton who does it so well. Even so, training at Ellis Park, he was filling in the spare time by lofting high balls to Nick

"It seemed to me that the way to catch people's eyes was to develop my pass. In my last year at school I started to go into the gymnasium and practice for an hour regularly. I chalked a square against a crash mat and if I got a certain percentage of 15 balls on the mark I would go back a foot and start again".

Hill was born in Birmingham but his family moved south when he was seven, to an area which is hardly a hot-bed of rogby. He went to the Bishop of Wandsworth Grammer School in Salisbury. His international cap is the first to be won by a pupil, his school or by the local Salisbury club for whom he played during his first year at university.

He only played in England's senior trial

He has also enjoyed playing behind these touring England forwards. "Having watched England for so many years when the forwards appeared to be lacking dynamism I expected us to win little ball. But our forwards have been brilliant, especially in the rucking. The ball comes back on the floor as though on a plate and it leaves you so many options."

Unfortunately, that was not the case in bis first international, but in difficult circumstances Hill played as well as anyone. His basic attributes, courage and a quick pair of hands, served him well. He may not be the most natural footballer to occupy the position but it is his now: someone else will have to work very hard

Shaw is the first Briton to be disqualified

THE TIMES THURSDAY JUNE 7 1984

Stephen Shaw became the first British player to be disqualified from a major tenais tournament yesterday. The 21-year-old Middlesex player earned that unwanted distinction at the Manchester distinction at the Manchester tournament, sponsored by GMC, at Didsbury yesterday, after being involved in incidents described by the referee, Bea Seal, as "the most disgraceful I have ever seen."

Shaw ranked 12th in Britain, finished his third round match with Nick Falwood of Derbyshire, which he lost 7-6, 6-0, with Mrs Seal watching after he had three times thrown his ractinet away. His thrown his racquet gway. His actions had brought him to within a point of disqualification, and afterwards he admitted he didn't try in the second set, during which he served seven successive double faults, and at the end threw his lands, and at the end threw his racquet into a neighbouring garden. Mirs Seal promptly defaulted him from the rest of the tournament. A top official for 20 years, she said: "What he did was completely derogatory to tennis, to the tournament, and to the chub."

Shaw calimed his behaviour was triggered by a had call from the umpire, John Southworth, early in the opening set. "I am ashamed at my behaviour" he said. • John Fitzgerald, the Australian John Fitzgerald, the Australian No. 4 seed, sulssed a match point and was knocked out in the second round of the Beckenham tournament, sponsored by the Kentish Times, yesterday. He was beaten 6-1, 3-6, 7-6 by his fellow countryman Craig Miller.

make some dull weather well worth tolerating. Yesterday, they warmed up in both senses when Matts Wilander beat Yannick Noah, 7-6, 2-6, 3-6, 6-3, 6-3, thus reversing the result of last year's final in a match of dazzling splendour. It spanned three hours and 35 minutes of a lovely afternoon, and was always a compelling spectacle.

Two years ago Wilander, now 19, became the youngest of all French singles champions, of either see. He was runner-up in 1983 because Noah, who was tiring at the end, just had enough strength left to beat him instrenous, but straight sets. The same thing might have happened yesterday. But in the course of a thrilling first set that lasted 7-4 minutes, Noah spent more energy than he could afford – because he lost the set.

After 72 more minutes of After 12 more minutes of straining, sweating effort. Noah had won the second and thirs sets. But the type of game he plays – the only type of game that gives him a chance against Wilander – is awfully wearying. It demands leaping, lunging aerobatics in the forecourt. All that took its toll.

At the end of the third set and the beginning of the fourth, Noah was afflicted by cramp and, though ciling and wastering he lear during the set during the set.

oiling and massaging his legs during changeovers, naturally expected that the cramp would get worse. There was fear in his eyes. Despair. He knew or thought he knew, that he was too tired to win another set. But the cramp vanished. What

The French championships had athlete has and what a marvellous always been interesting enough to make some dull weather well worth wilander had broken his service in wilander had broken his service in the first game. Again, Noah was grimacing, clenching his fist, shouting at himself, the man's intensity was frightening. He had the crowd on his side because they, to dig ever more deeply into his obbing energy. And dig, he did. Noah had two break points in the sixth game but could not win either. When Noah was serving at 3-5 and 30-all he had to pause for a few moments. The wind had blown up a swirling cloud of shale. Noah did not need that. He had given his all. he was losing, he was feeling low and there was nothing left in him but courage and hope. He went match point down by over-hitting and approach shot. Then he was beaten by a forehand return off a second service.

In spite of the sad reminder of human frailty, this was a joyous drama. The packed centre court glowed in bright heat. The russet court was a lonely, cruelly-demand-ing battleground. The inscrutably composed Wilander hit his grounds-trokes to an exemplary length that gave Noah no uncarned chances to get to the net. But, somehow, Noah got there - and his reactions and reach were astonishing.

England's potent exile bides his time

Another England squad is announced, and once again we sigh, and start counting on our fingers and work out how long it is we have to go. The answer is: until April, 1985. And we remember, when that infamous list was first published, that list if our brave lads who went to foreign lands to play under the thought of the South African Breweries (Company, how we scanned the names, registered that most of thom, Company, how we scanned the names, registered that most of them, fine cricketers that they were, were palyers a little way on to the wrong side of the hill, sighed with relief that Botham and Gower were not among them, and then turned to one name and said: Oh. By Mandarin (Michael Phillips) SUN PRINCESS has a good chance of winning the Coronation Cap at Encoun today and thus emulating Protty Polly, Petite Etoile and Lupe, the suin filles this contany to have win this coveted trophy a year after winning the Oaks.

This will be the third time that my pleasure from winning the Rosebery 7
Memorial Stakes with BISHOP'S in RING (map) who strikes me as the best bet on the programme after those convincing wins at Nottingham, Ripon and Kempton Park.

This race represents a step up in class for Bishop's Ring, but it has to been hard not to admire the way that in he has won his last two races. How will be treated much more harshly in selection has met Time Charter, the winner of the Oaks two years ago. The first was at Ascot last July when Time Charter did the better in will be treated much more agrantly in future handicaps, so no wonder. Stoote is cashing in again quickly while Bishop's Ring's weight has gone up by only 2 4lb penalty. when time charter and the beater in the King George VI and Queen Elizabeth Diamond Stakes. The second was in the Prix de l'Arc de Triomphe, in which Sun Princess was second, a neck in front of her old

Spicy Story who ran so well in the race won by Forest Of Dean at Newbury, Brake, Hidden Destiny and Rough Pearl, who will be trying to recoup those Chester losses, are markle of resulting ways were resulted. In this instance the likelihood is that Sun Princess with a pacemaker to aid her cause will have the advantage over Time Charter, whose training was slightly interrupted last month. Sun Princess on the other hand should have derived enormous benefit from a thoroughly good werkout on Newbury racecourse recently. capable of providing my map with he stiff opposition, but I still find it impossible to look beyond Bishop's

Earlier in the day the Ring and.

Brymer Trophy and the Ladbroke Credit Express Handicap look much more open. Little Sharchy (2.35) will be hard to catch in the sprain if hel's runs as well as he did behind...
Pampas at York in May, He has been beaten again in the meantime, but that was over six furlongs at Lingfield Park and he will appreclate the drop in distance.

Kiowa (3.5) my selection for the anxi race on the card, is a werkout en Newbury racecourse recently.

On a line through Lovely Dancer, who finished seventh in last year's Arc, Romildo, the lone challenger from France today, could easily timm out to be Sun Princesa's most troublesome rival. Romildo finished three lengths in frest of Lovely Dancer in the Prix Ganay at Lougchamp at the end of April.

Shearwalk overcame considerable problems to finish third in list year's Derby. But he performed indifferently in France recently. However, the ground was bad that day and a better effort can be expected now on better ground.

No matter how Shearwalk gets on in the big race, Michael Stoute and Ganay at Kiowa (3.5) my selection for the a next race on the card, is a progressive type at the right end of the handicap. He won a race, confined to apprentices at Folke-stone on Monday and has not been to can be successful at Brighton and Salisbury. Cycling: The Irishman awaiting the challenge of the Tour

Kelly intending to defy tradition by climbing the highest peak in sport

At a tidy, unpretentious house in a small town in the Brussels suburbs, steady summer rain patters on the flat transparent ceiling of the games-room extension where Herma Nys keeps his parrot and an old billiard table for an occasional game with his howher. The analyses of the parton of the par brother. The anniversary of D-Day brings recollections of his boyhood in the Belgian underground resistance.

Leaning up against the billiard table is a partly dismantled bicycle frame. Indismanued picycle frame, in-deed, much of the room is taken up with the tools, trophies, knicknacks, the long row of old leader's vests on hangers like a tetailer's window, of the young man busy with a spanner adjusting the pedals. A gendame on the other side of town cannot tell you the name of the road but instinctively knows of the house where "Mister Paris-Nice" is garishly painted by well-wishers on the driveway of the family with whom he has lodged for six years.

Ferocious

You can lift that the can be carbon-fibre frame, and he is a little finger. It is Sean Kelly's a little finger. It is Sean Kelly's new carbon-fibre frame, and he is adjusting measurement of handlebars, brakes and gears in preparation for the start of today's Tour of Luxembourg. That is followed by the Tour of Switzerland, and he will not return to this domestic oasis, where Herman's grandchildren in Flemish and joke with him in Flemish and French, and Grandma Elise devotedly grills his steaks, until after the most physically fer-ocious individual annual sport-

On a mountain climb such as Alpe d'Huez, where some 300,000 spectators will line the banks and rocks around the 100 hairpins, the riders are close to mental oblivion as they crest the summit among the clouds.

"John", which is what the Flemish call him rather than grapple with "Shawn", has a realistic chance of becoming the training two to three hours a first rider from outside the day, building up latterly to six traditional cycling nations ever or seven hours. Sean knows that ultimately everything comes down to the mental factor, the imponderable which separates all great athletes at the top of every sport. It is odd to hear Herman Nys talking in an English colloquis-lism, saying that "John now believes in himself". He is convinced Sean has been capable of overall victory in the Tour for two or three years - he was seventh last year - but that when the mountain stages arrived the Irishman, with his unrivalled sprinting qualities, would fade from the leading names because he became preoccupied with finishing the course instead of fighting to stay with the front riders. Now he is not overawed by the mountains, where on the downhill stretches they reach 60mph or more.

"He has grown from boy to man", says M Nys, whose affinity with cycling in the British Isles came when he was stationed at Larne late in the war. "What Elsie and I are proud of is that Sean's word is known to be reliable, that he recognizes there's another life after cycling." Sean says he will definitely retire at home in Carrick when his racing is finished; his introspective image may to some extent limit his scope for valuable advertising endorsements.

With M Nys's guidance, he has resolutely stayed off drugs, though rigorous testing on the Tour de France, with seven riders called in each day, has virtually eliminated abuse and even jeopardized normal medical back-up by banning many proprietory cough mixtures and other chemists' non-prescribed supplies. You've fewer rights than the man in the street. Sean laughs.

His hair is greying already, the sharply boned nose looks as weatherbeated as a farmer's: he is the only one of three brothers who can proficiently milk his father's cows. Yes, he admits. he is riding even better this year, but everything depends on who comes to a peak in three

Elliott's great escape from under Leali gains an edge on the pack

Merano, Italy (Agencies) - A dispute over the way three breakaway riders were caught by the main pack marred Bruno Leal's eighteenth-stage win in the Tour of Italy yesterday. Roberto Visentini, second in last year's race complained that an official car and several motor cycles has combetween the two groups and made it easier for the pack to catch up, at the top of the 1.883-metre high Tonale Pass.

Leali broke clear of the pack in the last kilometre to finish five seconds clear. Erik Pedersen of Norway led the pack in, Francesco Moser finished fifth in the same time as Pedersen and retains the leader's pink jersey for today's mountainous stage to Selva.

Birmingham and West Ham win their appeals

West Ham United and Birming-ham City have had their suspended FA Cup bans dismissed by an FA commission meeting in London

The two clubs had separate hearings at a Board of Appealmeeting at Lancaster Gate, appealing against the sentences passed by an FA Commission in Birmingham on March 7. The Commission was set up to investigate two pitch invasions and crowd disturbances at the clubs' fifth round FA Cup tie at St Andrew's on February 18, which

St Andrews on Pentury 18, which Birmingham won 3-0.

The Birmingham Commission found the home side guilty of failing to control their supporters. The three-man Board of Appeal yesterday heard evidence from the match referee, George Courtney, the two linesmen, police, two independent witnesses and representatives of both clubs, eventually overturning the decision of the FA Commission after deliberating for five hours.

An FA spokesman said: "We are not prepared to divulge the reasons for the Commission decision being overturned." The board, comprising FA vice-chairman, Arthur McMullen, the chairman of the inter-national committee. WE'RE LOOKING FOR ELECTRONICS ENGINEERS WHO ARE LOOKING FOR A CHALLENGE.

Although Heath Robinson may have been a little unorthodox in his approach to design problems, he undoubtedly demonstrated the enterprise and ingenuity so essential to our business.

The aerospace industry presents engineers with challenges unlikely to be found anywhere else. That's why these vacancies are for people who relish involvement in projects which will stretch their abilities to the limit.

We're extending the Design and Engineering facilities at our Bolton site. strengthening the links between product development and production, and opportunities for Electronic Engineers are now available in the following areas:-

NEW EQUIPMENT DESIGN

The need for practical solutions to an ever-increasing range of operational demands means that engineers are constantly involved in new and stimulating design projects. A typical current task is the development of interface systems to link aircraft and missile computer systems in flight.

MISSILE TEST EQUIPMENT

The development of advanced Automatic Test Equipment, which will subject today's highly intelligent missile systems to conditions which simulate the strict environmental problems they will face in use. These posts offer plenty of scope for software development.

POST-DESIGN SUPPORT

With operational requirements constantly changing, and technological advances always occuring, our postdesign support team ensure that products are updated and modified throughout their life span.

TODAY'S JOB OPPORTUNITY. TOMORROW'S CAREER This expansion of our design engineering facility is a reflection of the growth we are currently experiencing. Existing projects alone will keep us occupied over the next decade, and there are more new developments in the pipeline. For engineers with an eye on the future as well as a good job opportunity today, these openings provide real opportunities to develop long-term careers.

LIVE AND WORK IN THE BEST OF ENVIRONMENTS These positions are based at our

Bolton site, located right next to a busy, modern town with every facility and surrounded by open countryside. Excellent motorway links provide easy access to beauty spots such as the Lake District. North Wales and the Fylde Coast, plus major connurbations such as Manchester.

Housing is relatively inexpensive and assistance with relocation will be provided where appropriate.

General Appointments

Managers for advanced research programmes In all areas of Computer Science Up to £35,000+substantial benefits

We are searching for a number of key scientific trail blazers to direct major research projects at the new Hewlett-Packard Research Centre, Bristol.

The Hewlett-Packard commitment to technical excellence is acknowledged in world markets. It has achieved a prominent position through the calibre of its research effort in Palo Alto. In 1983, the company spent $493m on R&D, representing 10.5% of sales revenue.

A further, and highly significant, example of Hewlett-Packard's commitment to the future, is the establishment of a new Research Centre in Bristol. The rationale for this development, centres on the recognition that in Europe, there are areas of particular expertise, which, if brought to bear, will significantly contribute to Hewlett-Packard's long term corporate product objectives. Our immediate task is to recruit a number of managers, to drive specific project teams in the following areas:

- ★ Communication Networks/Data Coding and Encryption.
- ★ Artificial Intelligence/Expert Systems. ★ Software Engineering — developing
- tools and methodologies. * Graphics.

For these critical roles we are looking for people of very high calibre. They will be acknowledged experts in their field and have the management skills to lead talented teams creating some of the future generation of Hewlett-Packard products. Clearly we will be asking for high academic achievement, together with a record of creativity and implementation of design concepts, which has led to the successful introduction of products into the market place.

The managers appointed will establish close working relationships with their opposite numbers in Palo Alto, Universities and with Hewlett-Packard operating companies in Europe. Communications between Bristol and Palo Alto will be close through regular visits and the introduction of a teleconferencing facility. The Bristol Laboratory will conduct both unique and complementary research to its counterpart in Palo Alto. It will grow to a total of some 300 people by 1987.

If you would like to explore these opportunities further, send your curriculum vitae in confidence to Geoffrey King, Managing Director of Cambridge Recruitment Consultants, who is advising Hewlett-Packard on these appointments. which are open to both men and women.

The Times guide to career development

Can you manage your job title?

Manager is one of the most abused words in the employment vocabulary. The term can be a courtesy title for senior operatives whose job requires no concern for the wider relevance of their work to the organization as a whole. Equally, it can describe someone who is responsible for all aspects of a complete enterprise.

The distinctions are usually wellunderstood within individual working cultures. But considerable confusion arises once boundaries are crossed. Applicants for a job in a new company would do well to make sure that their understanding of the term "manager" is shared by their prospec-tive employer and also that the status and other rewards match up to mutual expectations.

In its original sense "manager" described a person who carried responsibility for a task or function—the person in charge". This was subsequently corrupted to mean someone who only got other people to do things. In recruitment language this is expressed as "persuasive communication", "achieve objectives by the motivation of people" or "control and co-ordinate".

Lately there has been a return to the more democratic team leader or executive management concept where managers are responsible for generating their own output as well as that of subordinates. A recent advertisement for a general sales manager for a wine company, for instance, asks for someone to train, motivate and direct a national network of representatives while personally handling house accounts". In specialist areas the executive extension can create burdens in keeping pace with new developments while managing others. At the same time, at least in theory it has advantages in preventing managers from becoming too remote from ubordinates

Many old job titles therefore can hide a multitude of new requirements which are not always advertised in the job specification. Micro-technology has already changed out of all recognition the requirements behind the title "production manager". While an earlier generation of office managers concentrated mainly on filing cabinets and stationery, their successors are wrestling with the full-blooded implications of electronic information systems. Any manager thinking of returning to an earlier area of expertise after a gap of even a few years should check out any assumptions and be prepared to take a refresher course before applying.

Another factor to investigate are the opportunities in areas which did not exist a few years ago. In the last 20 years, the service sector has overtaken manufacturing as the dominant area for employment. By the end of the century, services are expected to provide three out of every four jobs. Examples of new openings of managers culled from recent advertisements include building societies, plastic credit card producers, franchizing, casinos, insolvency, freeports and stockbroker services. These are in addition to predictable areas such as shops, hotels and hospitals.

Pioneers of the post-World War II management movement", like the late Mr Lydall Urwick, preached the necessity for managers to learn to lead rather than command. The pioneers believed that leadership could be taught, particularly if the process started early in life, say the mid-twenties C. Northcote Parkinson, originator of Parkinson's Law, identifies six basic requirements for leadership. These start with a clear picture of the final result and end with personal magnetism and visibility (leadership cannot be exerted from behind closed doors). Parkinson also adds that the rules do not change - merely that they have to be rediscovered by each

While leadership has returned to prominence as a desirable quality in management, the modern feeling is that it is not enough by itself Mr John Greenians, the 39-year-old Canadian who became chief executive of Nabisco Brands United Kingdom operations earlier this year, considers it equally important to be able to be good coach or just a very reliable comprehensive government survey on women at work published since 1965. The survey, Women and Employment: a Lifetime Perspective by Jean Martin of the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys and Ceridwen Roberts of the Department of Employment, was based on a nationally representative sample of 5,500 women; 800

It found that the distribution of women workers was mainly confined to a few occupations, mostly in the services sector. Moreover 50 per cent worked a fall week (more than 31 hours) and the majority of those who worked part-time were employed for more than 16 hours a week (thereby entitling them to the same legal protection against unfair dismissal and compensation for redundancy against main dismissal and compensation for redundancy as their full-time counterparts).

The survey concluded that while women remain the "primary houseworkers", "tread evidence suggests that more and more women will be attached to the labour market for most of their working lives." This did not, however, appear to have changed men's attitudes to their

(Channel 4, 9.30 pm), Derek Benham's film that first surfaced at the London Film Festival last year, is a bit tike the bee that turks in the rose, that stings as you stoop to take in the perfume. When the sting comes in the film, it is very nesty indeed, which should not surprise you when you consider that this is an lan McEwan story, and Mr McEwan's characters inhabit a world where every second rose conceals a bee. And, indeed, the bees are heard buzzing happily away in the first seconds of Mr strikes up a friendship, he was orphaned by a car crash. Jenny can cartwheel with joy as much as she likes at a country picnic, her young friend can warm to his surrogete mother as much as he wants, and the two of them can go rowing along the river to their hearts' content, but Mr McEwan is not going to let this idyll get out of hand. It is not for nothing that he has settled on the last Day of Summer as the title for his cruel and touching story, exquisitively photographed by Nic Knowland.

 PREACHER IN A MILLION (Radio 4, 7.40 pm), David Capper's minutely documented file on the Northern Ireland evangelist Leslie Hale, is so heavy with statistics that have no custime with statistics that ! have no qualms about adding a couple more: ninety-five per cent of it is to do with Mr Hale's finances and five per cent with his faith. The proportion seems about right, given that it is the revivalist's moneyraising activities and the disposition of that cash that has exposed him to so much villification.

One in 3 children get poor education and provision. No London authorities were rated "poor" on books, but in one-half of the shire counties there was a lack of books for at least one age

Parents are helping in the library or classroom, improving premises, supplying transport, kit, books and musical instruments, in most schools.

The general conclusions, which do not identify individual authorities, are that 28 education authorities provided "less than satisfactory" resources in most aspects, while only 14 had "at least satisfac-tory" levels of resource in all main fields.

Although teacher numbers fell by 5.500 to 414,500 last year, pupils numbers also dropped by 200,000. Many schools and authorities are criticized for failing to redeploy staff efficiently to take account of falling rolls and the improvement in pupil-teacher ratios.

Sir Keith Joseph, Secretary of State for Education and Science, said the report's "clear message" was that many authorities and schools were failing to grasp the opportunities to improve education offered by effective He accepted however, the difficulties caused by population changes and spending constraints, and said that deterioration in buildings and poor maintenance and repair were "particularly worrying".

Mrs Nicky Harrison, who chairs the education committee of the Labour-controlled Association of Metropolitan Authorities, said the report showed that education was becoming more dependent on handouts from better-off parents.

Mr Giles Radice, Labour's chief education spokesman, said that although, according to the report the situation had slightly improved in schools the im-provement was "extremely patchy".

Mr Fred Jarvis, general secretary of the National Union of Teachers, said the reliance by schools on parents' cash was a "blatant breach" of the Edu-cation Act. 1944, and was leading to "major inequalities" in the system.

Letter from Normandy

Media strike force overruns beaches

In a reversal of things compared with 1944, the longest day began yesterday with two British agents, Miss Selina Scott and Mr Frank Bough, broadcasting from Normandy to Britain over the BBC's clandestine Breakfast Television network listening to which is punished by the penalty of being considered "naff".

At least, the code in the British morning newspapers said they were broadcasting. Let us hope they completed their mission. In another part of the vast theatre of operations, the feared White House press division was swarming ashore. Its mission: to destroy coverage of who-ever had won the California primary.

Meanwhile, many of us, in another reversal of the situ-ation of 1944, preferred to anon of 1944, preferred to invade Normandy via Paris. Once arrived, we discovered that the Americans were pressing ahead with their strategic aim of reelecting Mr. Reagan, and the BBC with theirs of vanquishing TV-am.

At Bayeux, a large number of Swedes rushed up the shore remacting the invasion of 1944. Those of us with the knowledge of mid-twentieth century history dimly recalled that the Swedes were not combatants in 1944 nor indeed in most conflicts since the Thirty Years War. It emerged that an amateur military history society, which was reenacting the invasion. contained an inordinate number of Swedish members many Swedes apparently, being unprepared to resign themselves to being Mr Olof Palme or Mr Ingmar Berg-mann. Elsewhere in Normandy a certain ordered chaos reigned The French security closed off the roads to the British and all other foreigners. American security closed off the roads to all other foreigners including the French.

On the television screens of a hundred cases Mr Reagan and M Mitterand could be glimpsed orating magnifi-cently. The Queen appeared on the cliffs at Arromanches. Thousands of visitors specially Americans, poured into the region under the misapprenhension that they would be allowed to get anywhere near the beaches.

Outside the railway station at Caen three huge buses were on hand to take the world's press down to the beach to observe Mr Reagan. Various American ex-servicemen, their chest heaving with medals, asked to be taken too. Sull

"Are you a journalist", a French official asked one of them. "Oh sure", the old soldier replied. "Gee swee famous journaliste - nommé Ernest Hemingway." The official was unconvinced. Who can say whether the old soldier saw again the beach he presumably last saw 40 years before?

The small towns which those men helped to liberate in 1944 now wore a glossier guise. In Bayeux, a women's hairdresser had a paratrooper's uniform hung in the window. Fast food joints offered D-Day hamburgers. Yet through it all a certain nobility emerged. At Pegasus Bridge, near Caen, where stands the first house in France to be liberated by the invading forces - British paratroopers as it happens - a rather amateur local band, at intervals, played God Save the Queen and the Marseillaise on wobbly trumpets. Britons in green berets wandered about assuring one another that it all was just as it was 40 years

The bridge was raised as the royal yacht Britannia slid past. We all cheered. The man bridge assured me that, as a boy, he was there on that night, all those years ago, President Reagan and the Queen, as was to be expected comported themselves as the ceremonial heads of state they are. One of them admittedly is also a politician trying to be reelected. But we all know that the ceremonial role is the job he most relishes and at which he is best. President Mitterrand, as befitted a French intellectual spoke among other things of reconciliation with Germany. M Pierre Trudeau, whose country suffered disproportionately on these beaches, was eloquent in two languages.

As it was a day for the late middle-aged and the elderly, it was also a day for the young. Crowds of young people in the cases of the towns. For once, the uniform of T-shirt and jeans was not that of left wing protests. Instead, there seeme among the young the sense that they were present among survivors of events previously
